BOARD OF ALDERMEN.

There were many formal hearings at the aldermanic meeting last Monday evening and only one of real interest, that on the subject of police pensions. President Carter was in the chair and Aldermen Bishop, Bosson, Burr, Cabot, Clarke, Converse, Day, Doherty, Holmes, Hunt, Palmer, Stone, Underwood, Weston and White were present.

The first business of drawing jurors for the Superior Court resulted in the selection of Charles W. Florance West Newton, Charles F. Avery, Newtonton, and John W. Blakeney of Nonantum. Alderman Hunt making the drawing.

No one appeared at the following hearings: Mellen Bray to keep gasolene at 790 Beacon st., C. B. Fillebrown to remove two trees on Bellevue st., the Gas Light Co. for poles on Northgate Park, and Newtonville ave., the Telephone Co. for poles on Braeland ave., for attachments on Hawthorne ave., and Langley road and to enlarge its Washington st. conduit.

Mr. Louis F. Abbott protested against a sewer in Ossipee road and Shawmut park unless it was demanded by the Board of Health.

Mr. Henry Haynie, Commander of Charles Ward Post, G. A. R., appeared at the hearing on the petition for acceptance of the act authorizing the granting of police pensions and spoke as follows:

The subject of pensions, that is to say, the providing for the future of those who are faithful in civic as well as in military employment, is one which long since attracted attention in Europe, and is now being pondered over in this country to a marked degree. Pensions are assured to all branches of National, State and Town civil employees almost everywhere in the Old World, and it is not hazardous to predict that they will be the reward of long and faithful service throughout this land before many years are gone. We, however, are concerned this evening only in a body of public servants of whose ability and faithfulness we have a right to be proud, and in whose life we should be humanely interested. We are dealing tonight with the future existence, here on earth, of that fine body of guardians of our lives and our property known as the police of Newton.

It is not a mere sentiment that impels so many of us to urge your honorable body to accept the State law authorizing cities to pension their policemen under certain circumstances. We are urging you, Sirs, to do this as a common sense proposition practically applied to an economic and moral question of the highest importance. For we hold, gentlemen, that if your votes are in the affirmative, and if the provisions of this act are accepted, the result will be for the benefit of the entire community, not for the policemen alone, but for every man, woman and child in the city of Newton. There can be no doubt about it, if our policemen are assured that they shall have a pension when the proper times comes their work as guardians will be all the better, and more faithfully performed. This is not saying that the members of our police force are not good and faithful now, but there are degrees of excellence in all branches of human industry. Certainly as things now are, one of our policemen can have no genuine good reason for wanting to hold on to his present job. On the contrary he is naturally pretty apt to feel that things would perhaps have been better for himself and family if he had never become a policeman. Since some of these men joined the force the pay of carpenters, as well as of other trades, has largely increased so that if the patrolmen were working at his old job he would be earning more money than he is paid by the city for his services on the police force.

I know that the thought will occur to some, if not most, of you gentlemen, "But how about full time? A mechanic cannot always depend on a full year's work, whereas a policeman—" Quite true, Sirs. But we must not lose sight of the fact that this increased income is gained only by the policeman putting more of his life's blood into the work he is engaged upon than a mechanic is ever called on to do; not his energy, or his goodwill, but the imperiling of his very life in the protecting of our property and our lives. I shall assume that none of us would hesitate in our choice: whether to work nine or ten months in the year for some $800, or $900 and sleep in our beds every night, or to patrol the deserted streets of our city, in bad as well as good weather, even if we did receive some $200 more by doing so. And it is this ever recurring, monotonous night service which tells on the lives of these men. By this I do not mean that their lives are perceptibly shortened by being policemen, but I do insist that when they arrive at that age when they are no longer useful as guardians of our lives and property then they are wholly unfit for any other occupation. They will no longer be wage-earners, and should be, must be cared for.

Those of us who are asking you to accept this law hold that that enactment will benefit the people of Newton as much as if not more than, it does the police body. It is safe and reasonable to assume that once the fact is clearly established that a policeman can possibly gain a pension under given circumstances, or after a certain number of years of continuous service, he will be more determined than ever to obey the most exacting orders, to perform his whole duty in such a hearty, honest and thorough fashion as to escape the slightest chance of being summoned, tried and dismissed. His future and the future of his family, when he is no longer able to work, is in the balance, that is to say, the pension will depend on his own good work while in the service. By doing patrol duty the policeman will gain his final reward in money help when he most needs it, and meanwhile the citizens of Newton will feel and know that their property and lives are being more carefully and conscientiously watched over by these guardians. I have been informed that in all the cities of this Commonwealth where this law has been accepted an increased improvement in the moral of the police force has been noticed, and this is but natural.

It is pretended, I believe, by those who are opposed to pensioning our policemen that the acceptance of this law by your honorable body will add enormously to the city budget and thus give certain tax payers a chance to rail against their City Fathers. I think I am justified in saying there is more of pretense than belief in such assumption. It is said by them that any number of policemen can be placed on the city's pension roll at the whim of some chief and the city physician. But is this true?

The law is perhaps not so clear as it might be to some minds, but it is sufficiently clear to be understood by many of us. No policeman, whether disabled, mentally or physically, by injuries sustained through no fault of his own, in the actual performance of his duty, or whether he has performed faithful service on the force for twenty years, under this law, can be retired from active service without the consent of the Board of Aldermen. That is the whole of it, and the only doubt arises on the wording of the last proviso, the pensioning of men who have served for twenty years. Is that retirement also subject to the control of the Board of Aldermen? I certainly believe so, although I admit that there is some doubt about it. But I have an opinion on the subject from one who is competent to give an opinion. Be all this as it may, however, let us look at the matter in another light. There are present on our police force sixty-one officers and men whose ages run from 26 to 66 years. Of these no fewer than nine have been on the force twenty years or longer, and at first thought it would seem that if this act were accepted by you the pension roll would call for some $4,600 at once per annum. But, Sirs, there is not a man on the force—other than the one who should be, and another who perhaps ought to be—who wants to be retired on that age limit. None of them is in favor of giving up a full year's pay for half of that amount, and will not until compelled to do so. Thus, you see, the number retired for years of service may be placed at not more than two annually, and perhaps even two is too large an average.

We now come to possible retirement on pensions for disabilities, and here I have been helped by the actuary of a great Life Insurance company. Thus far, gentlemen, I have been dealing with the police force en bloc, and in a general way for the future benefit of all the worthy men on that force. But, Sirs, there is a special and particular reason why this law should be accepted by you, one so satisfactory, so convincing, so highly honorable to the police officer in question, that I doubt if another city in this country can equal it. Just 44 years ago this very month a boy born here in Newton volunteered as a soldier and went forth to do what he could to sustain the government and preserve the nation. He was only sixteen years old then, but his soul was already as patriotic and brave as that of any man in this grand old commonwealth, as that of any man within the hearing of my voice. He was in all the engagements that his regiment, the 28th Massachusetts Volunteers, participated in during the War of Rebellion; and on his nineteenth birthday this soldier from our city was severely wounded, yes wounded three times, and in one single battle! Having recovered from these wounds, he returned to the front, but when his three years' service had expired he came back here to West Newton.

It was impossible, however, for him to remain contented at home. Again he volunteered and joined his new regiment, the 61st Massachusetts Infantry, then at Petersburg. He remained in service until Lee's surrender when he returned to civil life again, but not until the Union Army was mustered out. In November, 1866, he re-enlisted, this time in the regular army, and was an active member of M company, 7th cavalry, which had Custer for its colonel. He was private, corporal, sergeant, and finally First Sergeant of that company, and when his discharge at the end of five years' service came, lo! it bore the word excellent on it as to his character. Fifteen days later he re-enlisted in the same company and regiment where he was still under the gallant Custer, and with whom he was in several battles against the Indians. It was he, our fellow-townsmen, who fired the first and last shots in the memorable engagement known as the Battle of the Little Big Horn, which proved so disastrous to Custer and to 261 soldiers under him, and if he himself is here today it is because his own company did not happen to be at the spot where the massacre occurred. He was finally discharged in December, 1876, with this noble character: "Brave, capable and trustworthy first sergeant," written on his papers.

Then he returned to his home in West Newton proud, as he had a right to be, of the fact that in these fourteen years of military service he had participated in 47 battles and skirmishes and had been wounded four times. On the 21st of January, 1878, this man was appointed a patrolman on the Newton police force by Mayor Fowle. Thirteen years later he was appointed Sergeant by Mayor Hibbard, and less than seven years after that he was made First Lieutenant by Mayor Cobb. Finally it was Mayor Weeks, our present congressman, who named him, in March, 1903, to the rank that he now holds.

This hero of fourteen years in his country's service as a soldier, and of nearly thirty years in his city's service as a policeman, is today in dire straits, and he is most deserving of all the help that can possibly be given him. He is troubled by his wounds and by impaired eyesight, a stiff elbow joint, a lame back, an injury to the left instep, varicose veins in the scrotum, protruding and bleeding piles, and at times dizziness in the head. His wife has been confined for sometime in the Insane Hospital at Worcester. He has had four children. Of these one daughter is under the constant care of a doctor for nervousness and other ailments, while still another daughter has been afflicted with spinal trouble for years. The prospects for her future welfare are very poor; in fact she is now in such a condition that her father has to keep her at home, she not being able to go to school. More than this, he himself was operated upon at a private hospital in Waltham only a couple of months ago, since when he has been almost a constant sufferer of great pain. It will be seen, gentlemen, that this brave and worthy man has his hands more than full while trying to keep up the existence of his family, and as a rich and powerful country allows him only sixteen dollars a month pension, we have ventured to come here to ask your honorable body to give him that permanent help and encouragement which he so richly deserves and has so faithfully earned. This can only be done by you accepting this act empowering you to grant pensions to our policemen. It is because we want this hero of war and of peace, this policeman of unstained reputation, this fellow-citizen of whom every one of us is proud to be the friend, and who, after these many years of action, always for the right, is no longer fitted to remain on the force which he has so long honored, it is because we want him, to benefit by this law that we are now appealing to you. There is every reason why you should hasten in the matter. I am afraid, Sirs, and I say it with the sincerest regret, that even if your honorable body should place the name of Captain John Ryan on the city's pension list he will not live long to enjoy your bounty. Nature can do much for man, but Nature seldom restores to strength again one so shattered by wounds and sickness as the captain is, at his time of life. Few men as old as he could possibly recover from the shock of such an operation as he had to undergo but recently, and when we add to that the everlasting effects of wounds received in wars we realize that he can hardly remain with us much longer. But even if God, in His infinite mercy, shall permit John Ryan to remain here a few months or years more he cannot stay on the police force. It is impossible for him to do such duty now as he would like to do, as a captain is expected to do. There are some days when he is wholly unfit for duty, and if he does not do the work he will not receive the pay. And so, after all these many years of faithful service to his country and to his native city John Ryan, with a wife in the hospital of an incurable disease, two sick daughters at home who require constant nursing, himself broken in body and suffering from injuries and disease contracted while doing his duty, will have to lie down to die, neglected by those to whom he has given his life's service, fed at last by the secret charity of a few neighbors and comrades who love the man for the good that he has done and for the noble, upright character he has always shown.

Recommendations of the Mayor that the $1,000 received for damages to city land in Needham from the railroad crossing be placed to the credit of Water Construction, and requesting a transfer of $200 in the appropriations for the Street Dept. were referred to the Finance Committee.

The request of the School committee that $1000 be transferred from its General to its Incidental appropriation was referred to the Finance Committee and on favorable report was promptly granted. The request of the School Committee that 2500 copies of its annual report be printed was received.

The bond of Alfred M. Russell, Agent of the Board of Health, as Constable with the American Surety Co. of New York as surety, was approved.

Petitions of John Flood and of John T. Burns for renewal of their Auctioneer's licenses were granted.

Petition of Thos. F. Fahey for 2 carriage licenses was referred to the Finance Committee, the City Clerk was authorized

The No-Names of Newton, formerly the players of the Pioneer Base Ball team, played a tie game with the Bigelow school eleven, Nov. 30, the score being 6-6. The over-confident Bigelow were surprised at the cleverness of their much lighter opponents, the ball being in the No-Names territory most of the game. For the No-Names Egan, W. Newcomb, Holligan and Kelley were the features and for the Bigelows, Morgan, Mortisey and Tucker excelled.

Newton Teacher for Head of Boston's Disciplinary School

Miss Arvilia T. Harvey of Hyde street, Newton Highlands, began her new duties this week as head of the "Disciplinary class" for unruly boys which the Boston school board has decided to establish in the Lewis school in Roxbury.

"Such a class has been conducted successfully in a number of other large cities but it has never been tried in Boston," said Miss Harvey in a recent interview.

The project was first spoken of among members of the Boston school board a year ago but it was not until recently that the real need of special class for unruly youths was felt.

Effort will be made to get as far away from the idea of a truant school as possible with this new project, according to Miss Harvey, in order that the boys forced to attend this class may not be regarded in any unfavorable manner.

Miss Harvey believes that she will be able to handle her new pupils successfully by making friends with them.

"Of course, if it becomes necessary to punish any of the pupils they will undoubtedly be punished," said she. "A rule against corporal punishment has never been made in the Boston schools, although in recent years this method has been generally discouraged as much as possible," she added.

"The main feature will be the giving of personal attention and instruction in regular school work. The usual grammar school studies will be taught in addition to sloyd and clay work. There is a gymnasium in the Lewis school and the boys will doubtless make use of this,

"Pupils for the special class will come from schools all over the city. After they have been brought up to the required standing they will be allowed to return to either their former or some other regular school.

"Why I was selected as head of the class I can not answer," said Miss Harvey in reply to a question put by the reporter. "My school in Allston was not by any means an unruly one; in fact, I got along very nicely with my pupils there. The appointment was truly a surprise to me," said she.

Only boys in the 4th to 9th grades will be taught in the "disciplinary class" and the sessions would somewhat resemble those of the old fashioned district schools attended by some of her prospective pupils' grandfathers. For the present Miss Harvey will conduct the class unassisted, but if it grows to sufficient proportions to require more teachers the school board, it is understood, stands ready to appoint one or more assistants.

Miss Harvey says she does not expect any girls in the "disciplinary class."

Miss Harvey has been a teacher in the Boston schools for several years. She has resided at Newton Highlands practically all her life and is popular. Her many friends in Newton Highlands will watch the experiment with considerable interest for they believe Miss Harvey will be able to conduct this unique class successfully without undue strenuousness in the way of punishment.

The lamentable lack of interest in the city election next Tuesday, due to the biennial election of mayor, is a cause of considerable concern to the Republican leaders in this city. In at least two wards close contests are expected over ward aldermen solely on the light vote which the off year election usually casts. Extraordinary efforts are being made to get out the vote and with the vote out,
the republican nominees will be elected.

Every republican and every other citizen interested in continuing the high character of city government should be impressed with the necessity for recording his vote next Tuesday. The nominees for aldermen at large and for school committee should also be given attention
particularly in those cases in wards
two and five where contests are being made for the school board. The republican candidates are present members of the committee and deserve the re-electionation they now seek.

The NO license vote is another feature which deserves attention if the city is to remain free from the obnoxious saloon. The off year is peculiarly favorable to a reduction in the normal
no license majority, and it is the duty of good citizens to register their wish on this most important subject.

Attention is called to the article in another column regarding the address of Mrs. Simkhovitch on the relations of the school to the Home. It is a subject for deep thought.

Dramatics

The first entertainment in the new parish house of the First Unitarian church, West Newton, was presented before a large audience Tuesday evening,
when young people of the parish gave the humorous dramatic sketch, "The Elopement of Ellen." The sketch was in three acts and was presented by the following cast:

Richard Ford.... Maynard Hutchinson
Molly..... Lydia Dennison
Robert Shepard, Frederick W. Freeman
Max Ten Eych..... Philip Spaulding
Dorothy March..... Ethel H. Freeman
June Haverhill, Constance Richardson
Rev. John Hume..... F. Rogers Thomas

In the leading character of June Haverhill Miss Richardson gave an enjoyable presentation of a Wellesley college graduate doing some special investigation in economics during the summer. In a love affair she and Rev. John Hume, who was impersonated by Mr.
Thomas, got into laughable difficulties
because of the sameness of their initials.
Music was furnished by Misses Elsie Kimberly and Lucy Clark Allen.

Entertainment Club Dramatics

The first dramatic sketch this season
by the Entertainment club was presented Wednesday evening in the entertainment rooms of Channing church before a large and appreciative audience. The offering was the three-act comedy "Bachelor Hall." The presentation kept the audience in almost continual laughter.

The cast included some of the best known amateur players of the city. The three scenes were laid in the home of Congressman Myrtleton in Washington.

The cast was as follows:

The Hon. Geoffrey Myrtleton: congressman from the 9th district

Ernest W. Wright

Silas Jervis and Elisia Bassett, Myrtleton's constituents from Rambletown, Frank H. Burt and Horace C. Harrington.

Ensign Jack Meredith: Acting under sealed orders Herbert H. Howe
Pinkerton Case: An amateur detective

Leverett Bentley

Vere Lee: An amateur actor and author of the "Fatal Shot" Philip H. Ball Jasper: The butler at "Bachelor Hall"

Dr. L. H. Naylor
O'Rouke: A policeman

Bancroft L. Goodwin

Betty Vance: Myrtleton's ward

Mary F. Cox

Polly Reynolds: An amateur actress

Madeline B. Dyer

Mrs. Van Stine: Who has dramatic aspirations, Mrs. Chas. Jameson Brown

Claire: Her daughter, who has not,

Amey C. Dyar

The performance was under the direction of Ernest W. Wright. The lines of all the participants were well rendered,
and the performance went off with remarkable smoothness and snap.

Mr. Wright is always good and his smooth work and finished acting were much appreciated. Dr. Naylor was excellent in a most difficult role. Mr. Bentley did the burlesque detective in a thorough manner, altho the part was not especially suited to his well known historical ability. Mrs. Brown brought down the house, and her laughing fit in the third act was particularly effective.

Space does not permit individual mention of the other members of the cast,
but all took their parts in excellent style.

Newton Y. M. C. A. Wins

In the Y. M. C. A. basket-ball league series Newton association's first and second teams both won from the first and second teams of the Boston association
here Wednesday night.

The first game went to Newton Y. M.
C. A. by a score of 16 to 15 after two closely contested halves. A. Wilson put up an excellent exhibition of basket shooting for the home team, while for the visitors Williams and Stockdale excelled. Newton did good all around team work.

In the game between the second teams
Newton easily outclassed Boston Y. M.
C. A., 32 to 14. For the home team
Hanson shot seven baskets and Connors was but shortly behind him with four baskets. For the visiting team Twitchell excelled.

Mr. Heymer Dead

John Edward Heymer, aged 45 years,
a well known Boston business man and an old time minstrel singer, died early Monday morning after an illness of only a few days at his home, 1762 Beacon st., Waban.

Mr. Heymer had in recent years been a member of the electrotyping firm of John C. Heymer & Son, 185 Franklin st., Boston, and was well known in the printing trade. While a young man Mr.
Heymer travelled for about six years with professional minstrel companies and appeared in many cities in the eastern part of the country. He had made his home in the Waban district of this city
for several years and was well known in that vicinity. Mr. Heymer was a member of the board of aldermen from ward 5 in 1898, defeating the present Mayor for that office. He was a member of the Dalhousie Lodge of Masons and prominent in its affairs. He is survived by a wife, one daughter, Miss Marion Heymer,
and a son, Irving E. Heymer.

There was a large attendance of friends and associates at the funeral services held in the Church of the Good Shepherd, Waban, at 2 o'clock Wednesday afternoon. Rev. James C. Sharp-rector of the church was in charge and the Mendelssohn quartet sang several selections. The flowers were extremely beautiful and testified to the esteem in which Mr. Heymer was held. Cremation followed at Mt. Auburn.

Messrs. L. H. Bacon, S. H. Wiley,
W. H. Parker, B. R. Hayes, A. S. Bos-son, associates of Mr. Heymer in the Dalhousie Lodge, F. A. M., and Newton
Royal Arch Chapter with Mr. Charles Parkhill, an old friend, acted as pall bearers.

D. R.

Sarah Hull Chapter, D. R., celebrated its Tenth Anniversary at the Newton Club House, Newtonville, on the evening of Monday, December third, the occasion being a Gentleman's Night. Mrs.
Albert F. Hayward, Mrs. Alexander M.
Ferris, Mrs. Francis E. Stanley and Mrs. Frank T. Benner, the four Regents who have served the Chapter during its ten years of active life, received in the large hall which was most artistically decorated by a committee under the chairmanship of Mrs. Alvin H. Clifford.

A trio of young ladies rendered delightful musical selections, piano, violin and vocal. Miss Coburn and Miss Wells supervised the bevy of young ladies who acted as ushers. Mr. D. Fletcher Barber introduced the speakers of the evening—Mrs. A. F. Hayward, Regent of the Chapter, who spoke gracious words of greeting; Mrs. Alex M. Ferris, Honorary Regent and "Mother of the Chapter", who extended hospitality to the guests and gave maternal admonitions and loving charges to her daughters; and Mrs. F. E. Stanley, who read a very bright poem recording reminiscences of the Chapter's life, written by Mrs. Albert De W. Sampson, Historian of the Chapter and chairman of the entertainment committee. The speeches were followed by a Grand March, Portland Fancy and Virginia Reel after which the beautifully decorated dining rooms were thrown open and substantial refreshments served. Mrs. Willard D. Tripp was chairman of the committee in charge.

A large number of members and guests were present and all greatly enjoyed the social event.

GAMBLERS RAIDED

Police Have Long Cold Vigil

But They Capture and Convict Their Men

The good people of Newtonville were much astonished Monday morning to learn from the Boston papers of the police raid on gamblers in their quiet village. The affair was managed with great credit by the police and they should receive the hearty praise of the better elements in the city.

The raid was made on the barber shop and adjoining room of W. H. Marston in the Associates' block on Walnut street, Newtonville, and at the end of a long cold vigil of nine hours on the part of six police officers. The officers had long suspected the place but were unable to secure evidence and indeed six officers had laid in wait for the gamblers on the preceding Sunday, but in such a position that they were unable to see the game in progress. The situation of these officers, confined in a dark room, all day long, unable to talk, make any noise or smoke, while the gambling went on within earshot, must have been extremely uncomfortable. It was endured, however, and a second vigil last Sunday was most successful.

The officers went into the barber shop at 3 in the morning, and found Moses Colinsky asleep in the barber chair, evidently a sentry on guard. He was disposed of quite satisfactorily, by arresting him on the charge of violating the rules of the board of health by sleeping in a barber shop, and taken to West Newton. Here Colinsky made many attempts to secure bail in order to get out to warn his friends but the police were unable (for some reason) to find any one to go on his bail. In the meantime, Officers Kimball and Kiley were hidden in an adjoining room to the room of the barber shop and the partition boards were renailed, leaving peep holes thru which they could see. Wrapped in blankets these men staid in this place until after twelve o'clock, the remaining officers hiding themselves at the other end of the building, connected with the concealed men by a long signal cord. It was about noon, when the gamblers began their game of craps for which there was a home made table and the room was heated by an oil stove. When sufficient evidence had been secured by the concealed men they signalled their brother officers, who then obtained admittance thru the barber shop door. While this was being done the gamblers had re-entered the barber shop thru a concealed door in the closet and with hats and coats on declared their innocence of a reason for the officers entrance. After they had been secured the imprisoned officers were released and the entire party carried to West Newton.

The men arrested were William H. Marston, 50 years old, a barber living at 17 Austin street, who is charged with maintaining the gambling place; O. A. McDonald, 30, meat cutter, living at 241 Walnut street; Robert Duncan, Mrs. later was identified as R. D. Kennedy, 36, painter, 31 Brooks avenue; Frank F. Farwell, 28, formerly a drug clerk, 800 Washington street; John Murphy, 51, shoemaker, 855 1-2 Washington street; and A. W. Somerville, 34, meat cutter, of Howard street, Brookline, but formerly of Newtonville, the last five being charged with gaming on the Lord's day.

In court Monday morning Harry Sanford of Newtonville represented that he was Robert D. Kennedy, one of the men arrested, but patrolman Arthur S. Kimball detected the attempted deception.

On the pretense of going to a telephone Sanford slipped out of the court building unobserved.

Kennedy was finally located and arraigned after the other cases had been completed. He was fined $30. O. A. McDonald, John Murphy, Frank F. Farwell and A. W. Somerville were fined $20 each for taking part in a game of chance for money on the Lord's day. William H. Marston was fined $65 for maintaining a common gambling place while the charge of being present the case was continued to April 6 for sentence. Moses Colinsky, 25, of Central avenue, Needham, for sleeping in Marston's barber shop, was fined $5. Marston pleaded not guilty to the charge of maintaining a gambling place and guilty to being present. Each of the other defendants pleaded guilty. The fines amounted to $180.

Patrolman Kimball testified that McDonald, Kennedy, Farwell, Murphy and Somerville shot craps and Marston received money. He was able to see the game by looking through holes bored in the wall. He heard Marston say, "Now boys don't keep any money on the table," and then proceeded to watch the corridor for the possible appearance of any one.

"The men rapped three times on the barber shop door before being admitted," testified patrolman Kimball. He said he heard Somerville say to Marston, "You were the only man who made anything on the game Thanksgiving day," to which Marston replied, "Oh, I don't know: I got only about 60 cents while I was gone to dinner."

Patrolman Kiley testified Marston tried the door of the room in which the policemen were concealed four times, but they held it against him and escaped being detected. He told of the surprise Marston expressed upon coming into the barber shop and finding "Mose" gone.

The men discussed the disappearance at length, the policemen testified, and someone expressed a suspicion that police had been in the building. With this they again searched the nooks and corners and rooms of the second floor, several times coming within a foot or two of the hidden policemen and once stepping on the string running from one squad of patrolmen to the other squad for signalling purposes. Finally the men went back into the little compartment, lighted an oil stove and began to play.

Patrolmen Hughes, McLaughlin, McNeil and Seaver then testified that upon receiving a signal they went into the barber shop and found the men scurrying through the hole leading from the closet to the compartment in the rear, each trying to put on his coat.

Marston told the court he did not care to make any statement under oath. Instead he conducted his own defense and asked questions of nearly every witness. He said he ran the barber shop, which is on the second floor of the block at 283 Walnut street, Newtonville.

"I cut the hole in the wall so as to get a draught into my shop last summer," he asserted. "I found a table in the room and sometimes we used to get out there and shake 'props.' We have gambled there only during the last two months," said he.

Marston emphatically denied that the gas pipe running to hidden compartment came from his shop until cross-examined by Chief of Police Mitchell when he admitted the gas came from his meter.

Kennedy had by this time put in an appearance and was arraigned for :king part in the game.

"Why did you attempt to deceive the court?" asked Judge Kennedy.

"Well, I expected to be here," replied Kennedy.

"Didn't you ask Sanford to come up here and attempt to pass himself off as you?" queried the judge.

"Yes, that is true," finally admitted the defendant.

"Who was the man you sent here?"

"His name is Harry Sanford."

"Why did you send him?" asked the court.

"I thought the men would be called and plead guilty and that would be all. I thought it would make no difference if I didn't come myself."

Chief Mitchell said that Kennedy had made the statement in a Newtonville drug store that he would not appear in court today. Judge Kennedy then imposed a fine of $30.

When the court asked to have Sanford called in it was found that he had gone out on the pretense of going to a telephone and had slipped out of the building.

The men arrested were William H. Marston, 50 years old, a barber living at 17 Austin street, who is charged with maintaining the gambling place; O. A. McDonald, 30, meat cutter, living at 241 Walnut street; Robert Duncan, Mrs. later was identified as R. D. Kennedy, 36, painter, 31 Brooks avenue; Frank F. Farwell, 28, formerly a drug clerk, 800 Washington street; John Murphy, 51, shoemaker, 855 1-2 Washington street; and A. W. Somerville, 34, meat cutter, of Howard street, Brookline, but formerly of Newtonville, the last five being charged with gaming on the Lord's day.

Patrolman Kiley testified that he heard the sound of police heard Colinsky snoring when they entered the building at 3 a.m. to hide themselves. The police entered the shop, arrested Colinsky, locked the place up again and waiting until after 12 o'clock when they caught the gamblers.

Associated Charities

Newtonville, Mass., Dec. 4, 1906.

Dear Mr. Editor,

A poor woman who was in the office of the Associated Charities this morning said she wished she could "have a piece put in the paper" telling everybody how kind the nurses at the Hospital were to her boy, who had been sent there with diphtheria. She hated to have him go, felt as if she could not let him go, "and now he's at home," she said, he's wishing he could be sick again so he could go back. He can't say enough about the nurses, how good they were to him. It didn't make a bit of difference that he was a poor boy. It is a great place!

She thought if this were "put in the paper" it might help other mothers not to feel so badly as she did about having their children sent to the Hospital.

Conducted by Miss GRACE M. BURT.

A meeting of the Board of Directors of the General Federation was held at Hotel Carlsbad, Saratoga, September 20-23, every member of the Board being present. It was voted to hold the next Council meeting in Jamestown, Virginia, in June, 1907.

It was unanimously voted to accept the invitation of the Massachusetts Federation to hold the next Biennial in Boston in 1908. Mrs. Philip N. Moore was made Chairman of the Biennial Committee, with Miss Helen A. Whittier as a member of the committee.

Standing Committees to carry on the department work of the Federation for the next two years and two new committees were appointed. The Outlook Committee, recommended by Mrs. Decker in her Biennial address at St. Paul, is to investigate the new subjects and new lines of work proposed from time to time to the Federation.

A new special committee was appointed, to be known as the Inter-Federation Committee, corresponding somewhat with the Committee on Federal Relations in Congress. It is to deal with the relation of the State Federations to each other and to the General Federation, in the hope of bringing about still closer relation and strengthening and perfecting the organization.

BELGRADE RUG COMPANY.

Worn-out and cast-off carpets are not useless, after all. The Belgrade Rug Company, at 32 Hollis street, Boston, Mass., have a way of re-making them in such a way that they not only make a beautiful appearance but that they prove durable in the use of them. Don't throw away your old carpets when they seem hopeless. See what the Belgrade Rug Company can do with them, no matter how torn and unattractive. They issue a circular which states briefly what goods make the handsomest rugs, etc., as well as price list and shipping directions.

A Canadian View

Mr. W. W. Blair of 34 Otis street, Newtonville, has been spending a few days at Ottawa, Canada, with his relative, the Hon. Andrew G. Blair. He reports that in discussing the matter of annexation of Canada to the U. S. they say: "This will probably come, but none can say just how soon or in what way. Two countries so closely related by nature and so similarly populated can hardly forever remain apart. But great movements often progress unseen for a time. England has already withdrawn her military from Canada. And not long ago the Canadian Minister of Justice said in effect that Canada would be safe under the Monroe Doctrine. Suppose England were to go to war with some other nation and that nation decided to attack Canada, could England defend it against the enemy? Would the U. S. defend it simply as a neighborly act, and having done so withdraw and hand it over to England again?"

In discussing the U. S. form of government, they think it is run without statesmen. The President's Cabinet made up of men who are trained only in the affairs they undertake to supervise and not trained statesmen. So soon as a man has served his few years as a leader in the presidency he is set aside, and, however weighty might be his influence, it is not made use of.

Literary Notes

The December National, from the cover, which is ornamented by one of Manning's striking heads, to the last page of the magazine, is attractive, and its contents unusually interesting. The frontispiece is a cartoon, "The Skating Season Has Opened," and a fine half-tone of the "U. S. Battleship Louisiana," "Affairs at Washington," by Joe Mitchell Chapple, is replete with those interesting things which everyone wants to know about the national capital. "The Bright Side of Packington," by Mary Humphrey, dispels many illusions and shows that the great institutions and homes of this much discussed community are grossly maligned by authors who have said that they are "unable to find one ray of sunshine to brighten the lives of these people, save such as they are able to get out of drunkenness." Miss Humphrey says that "This Packington community is, in the most dignified sense of the word, an industrial community. It is not pauperized. It is not a slum." It is a highly entertaining and readable article. The editor of the National tells of the "Ancient Order of Happy Habitats," and also contributes an interesting descriptive article on his recent trip to the Pacific Coast, under the title "Through the Golden West." There is an abundance of splendid fiction and verse in this number, including the Christmas stories "A Bit of Mistletoe," by L. Hennion, "Half and Half," by Charles Warren Stoddard, and poem, "From the Sea at Yuletide," by Mabel Ward Cameron. A half dozen other stories are contained in its pages, and the happy variety of material published in the National makes up a Christmas number that ensures a welcome in every household.

THEATRES

Keith's Theatre.—Mrs. Langtry is to make her first appearance in vaudeville in Boston at Keith's on Monday, December 10th. She is to appear in a one-act play by Graham Hill, entitled "Between the Nightfall and the Light."

It is an incident of domestic unhappiness and tragedy, with South Africa as the scene. As a wronged wife who saves her husband with her own life, Mrs. Langtry has a part admirably suited to her dramatic talent, which is shown at its very best in the climax. The famous "Jersey Lily" is as beautiful as ever and will wear several very handsome Paris gowns during her engagement, which is for two weeks. Surrounding the distinguished star will be a vaudeville bill that is notably high-class. Among the features will be The Finneys in their very interesting swimming exhibition; James Harrigan, the first of tramp jugglers, who has developed into one of the brightest monologists of the day; Willy Zimmermann in his wonderfully clever impersonations of the great composers and musical directors, past and present; the Olivotti Troubadours, in one of the most refined musical acts ever seen in vaudeville; Hawthorne and Burt, character comedians and dancers, and the Labakans, in a novel acrobatic

"DOLLY AND I and the REGINA"

Children like music and nothing musical more delights them than a Regina Music Box. It is sweet, deep-toned and musical—pleases their ears; and even the smallest tot loves to "see the wheel go round."

A Regina Music Box will educate the little ones while it keeps them occupied. They can hear the world's best music in their own homes. The thousands of discs afford a selection of sacred music, lively marches and jolly songs. Some styles of the Regina play twenty-four tunes at one winding.

The Regina Pianos are excellent instruments, and with or without our interior player attachment are sure to delight all music lovers.

Our Hall Chime Clocks, which sound the hours on soft, sweet chimes, will add a delightful charm to any home.

The Reginaphone combines two great entertainers, the music box and talking machine.

McIntosh asserted he had found his wife and baby missing and had gone to Mrs. Young's house to search for them and found the latter holding the child. McIntosh testified that several hours later Young followed him to a spot near street railway waiting room on Boylston street and hit him with a rock and board. An attempted break in the house of Edward P. Dunham, a Boston wholesale boot and shoe dealer living at 20 Exeter street, West Newton, was discovered yesterday when a caretaker went to the dwelling.

An investigation was made by the police, who found that sometime during the absence of the family a rear window opening from the first floor had been pried open. Although the dwelling had apparently been thoroughly searched nothing was missing so far as the police or the caretaker could ascertain.

The family has been absent from this city for several months. Mr. Dunham was notified this afternoon of the break. As the silverware had been placed in vaults and no jewelry had been left in the house it is believed by Chief of Police Mitchell that practically nothing of value was secured.

Fire caused by spontaneous combustion among rubbish in the cellar of the house on Washington street owned by James Flanagan and occupied by Thomas Fay and family did $75 damage early yesterday morning. An alarm was sent from box 14 at 12:30. Large quantities of smoke issuing from the cellar greatly alarmed the occupants and residents in the immediate vicinity. Quick work of the firemen kept the blaze from spreading.

MEMORIAL TABLETRecently Unveiled to Deceased Pastors of Eliot Church

Address of Rev. F. S. Hatch, Acting Pastor, Relative to Rev. Lyman Cutler and Rev. Dr. Davis

On the occasion of the unveiling last week of the Bronze Tablet erected by Eliot Church in memory of Rev. Lyman Cutler and Dr. Davis, the two ministers who have died while in office, the acting pastor preached an appropriate sermon from Luke 6:15: "Simon called Zelotes." "The Unknown Christian," was the subject.

Mr. Hatch showed that although we have only half line of his biography we do know considerable about Simon. We knew Jesus chose him and honored him with confidence and affection. We know Simon was a friend of Jesus; that he was acquainted with the best people of his time and was found in the resorts of good men.

The concluding portion of the discourse, which follows, is of local interest.

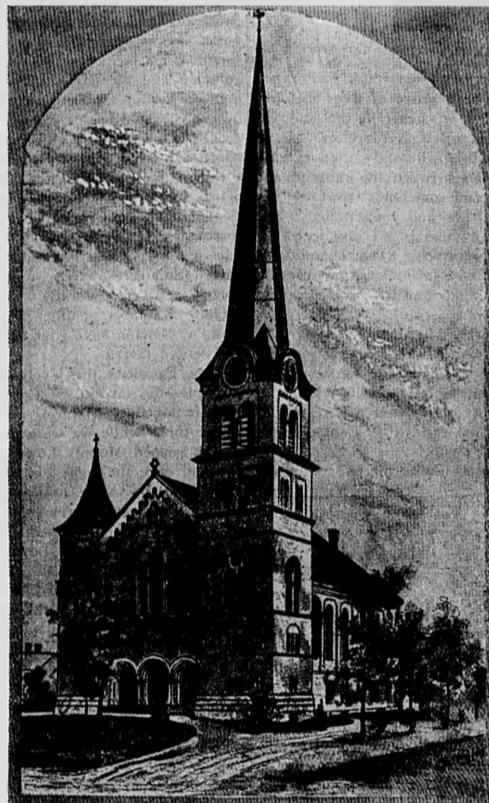

"Fifty two years ago this very autumn, Lyman Cutler became pastor of Church takes his place in the front rank.

When Dr. Davis came to Newton he was already in life's prime and well known. Later he became one of the most widely known ministers of our denomination in this and other lands. In our own community nearly every one knew him; children in the streets, invalids and aged people who from their windows saw him pass, men of all occupations and from all our churches. Temperamentally he was accessible to men of all types and conditions and you knew him so much more familiarly than the speaker that I need not attempt to paint his portrait today.

Such was our sympathy during his illness and so great our sorrow when he left us, it seemed as tho' everybody in this region must always know as we knew and feel as we felt.

How swiftly time bears us on! how rapid the changes in our population!

SECOND ELIOT CHURCH.
Dedicated April 4, 1861.
Burned Jan. 16, 1887.

Eliot Church. Consumption had already fastened upon him and so frail did he appear that the minister who preached the installation sermon remarked, "I felt as tho' I were officiating at a funeral."

Mr. Cutler preached once each Sunday for eight weeks, and then retired to his sick room. The following April he died aged 28.

His evidently approaching death at so early an age, and at the very beginning of his pastorate, created a profound impression throughout the community.

The people watched for the daily bulletins from his sickroom and showed the same tender interest in the sorrowful progress of his disease as you have recently shown in a similar experience.

Only 50 years ago! yet scarcely half a dozen people in the entire parish remember him and of these I have found only three or four who recall him with sufficient distinctness to say even a few words regarding his qualities.

He was evidently a spiritual man, a scholarly preacher, a gracious pastor, a gentle soul; tho' with that fervent, intense temperament which burns itself out all too soon.

But this invalid whose pastorate was so brief, and whose record is so meagre, did one unusual thing, whereby he laid his hand on this church and shaped its history to this day and beyond;—he named his own successor. This fact is mentioned in Dr. Wellman's historical discourse and is confirmed by those now living among us, who at that time were old enough to be conversant with parish affairs.

Dr. Wellman was pastor of this church longer than any other man and he was here at a formative period, when the parish was taking permanent shape and color. From before the revival of '57 and '58 down to the second term of Grant's administration, was a time of remarkable changes in both church and state. Locally, population was growing and the leader Mr. Cutler had chosen saw the number of his church members increase four fold. Judged by influence, the unknown pastor of Eliot

Less than two years have passed and already there are several members of this church who had not heard of Dr. Davis till they came to Newton; and there are a yet larger number among us who never saw him.

A hundred years hence there will remain on earth not one person who had seen either of these pastors whom we honor today. To our successors three generations hence both these reverend men will be "unknown to us."

But not entirely unknown; for, standing before the tablet you have erected in affectionate remembrance, men will read its modest inscription. They will weigh these expressive words—"Honored and Beloved." They will read the unwritten lines as we have been reading them in the life of Simon the Zealot. They will say: "God chose these two ministers and sent them forth and gave them honor and love in the hearts of men, and made them useful to this church and bound them together in the experience of a common suffering as they laid down their lives in her service."

Other centuries will come and pass and our memorial tablet will have gone, after the fashion of all perishable things. Granite and bronze will have crumbled, and 2000 years hence less will be known of us and ours than we know of Simon the Zealot. But none of these things move us, neither shall we care for earthly oblivion or renown. Faithful ministers and faithful congregations will have met together in the blessed company of God's faithful people.

At the close of a notable discourse concerning the minister and the congregation, Phillips Brooks expressed the belief that "They who have been minister and people to each other here will be something holy and peculiar to each other in the city of God forever."

As we read yonder tablet, and as we move on into the ministry of the future, let us think of these great words, and their greater suggestions. "Minister and people"; "peculiar to each other"; "in the city of God"; "forever."

MEMORIAL TABLET

Prayer of the Day.

Almighty and ever-living God, we yield unto Thee most high praise and hearty thanks for the wonderful grace and virtue declared in all Thy saints, who have been the choice vessels of Thy favor and the lights of the world in their several generations.

Especially we call to remembrance Thy loving kindness and Thy tender mercies to these Thy servants whom we this day commemorate. We bless Thee for Thy grace that kindled in their

a single flower is pretty but when acres upon acres of blooms stretched away they were surpassingly lovely. The inrolling waves, capped in the distance and breaking with a thundering roar on the beach, in long lines of foam, were grand and beautiful. Sometimes the mountain came to the ocean and the train wound along its foot many feet above the beach, giving a finer and farther reaching view.

The mountains rose steeply on our right, showing here and there the tremendous arousing action of falling water and often giving glimpses of canyons extending miles back into the range. Occasionally we would see a belt of the city. The frequent rains of February, March and April kept the green, shrubs and trees in royal green.

Rose bushes bloomed as if they had nothing else to do but to bloom and the picture they presented almost everywhere was wonderfully beautiful.

We had many friends in Pasadena who made our stay there weeks of delight.

Dr. Henry M. Field, a long time resident of Newton and a distinguished physician, resides with his wife and son on North Raymond Avenue. He has a charming home there amid a grove of orange, lemon and fruit trees and some of the finest rose bushes in Pasadena.

Dr. Field is a great lover of the rose and he has taken extreme care, in his selection of the finest specimens, and there he has given them the highest cultivation.

The view from his broad piazza or second story windows is grand and beautiful, extending east, south and west over level orchards of orange, lemon, apricot, walnut and others and thousands of acres of grape vineyards, broken by a few low hills and the Pacific shimmering in the distance; while from northwest to southeast the Sierra Madre mountains extend for scores of miles rising high in air and forming an imposing background to this attractive spot and cutting of the distant view.

Prof. C. C. Bragdon, the head of Lasell, Auburndale, has a fine estate on East Colorado Avenue which is very charming—his winter home with his son's house close by.

The Indian room is filled with Indian curiosities and hand-work and will interest anyone for hours. But, in his estimation, his picture gallery is the most valuable and attractive. In it he has many rare and exquisite pictures which he has collected in this country and Europe. Many of them, in former days, adorned his home in Auburndale.

Robert J. Burdette, the "Hawkeyeman," formerly of Newton, lives in an elegant home on Orange Grove Avenue surrounded by large grounds finely laid out—one of the best in Pasadena. It is named Sunnycrest. His wife is reported to be very wealthy.

Quite a number of other former residents of Newton have gone to Pasadena and settled there.

Even Pasadena the lovely—the picturesque—the favored of California resorts is not always warm and balmy. Three times while we were there snow storms capped Mount Lowe and Wilson and once the snow extended down Wilson's sides to the orange groves at its foot, but did no harm as it remained only for a few hours. And one day when I ascended Mount Lowe, I was caught in a snow storm.

The weather was often cold with high winds and water froze in the rear of the house where I was staying several nights.

Beans and potatoes, six or eight inches in height, were frozen and cut down to the ground. That this degree of coldness is seldom experienced here, is the testimony of the older inhabitants. And all agree were February, March and April have been colder, windier, more foggy and disagreeable than they have ever known.

That it was cold and windy, foggy and rainy I can testify. But few days were warm enough for me to sit out on the little piazza, even at midday, and nearly all the days fire was needed in the house a part of the time to keep comfortable.

Eastern tourists complained bitterly of the cold especially in hotels and boarding houses, even as far south as San Diego.

Hardly any of the hotels, boarding houses, and even private residences have a furnace, except the more recently built. The most surprising thing was the fact that easterners who had built houses here followed the custom of building without cellars and depending upon fire-place for the heating arrangement.

All the large modern hotels and expensive private residences are amply heated by furnace now.

Another thing that is surprising to an easterner, and that is the smallness of the piazzas, I had expected to see everywhere, broad piazzas on two or more sides of the houses, such as we find at our northern sea-side and mountain summer homes. In this I was disappointed. The piazzas, generally speaking, are small, except on the more pretentious houses. The reasons given for this were, that the mornings, late afternoons and evenings were too damp and chilly to enjoy the spending much time on them.

MOUNT LOWE.

In order to get a birds-eye view of this delightful land, the tourist must ascend Mount Lowe, which is said to be six miles from Pasadena. When you ride in the electric the distance seems an exaggeration; when you attempt to walk it, a most decided underestimation; for it seems the mountains retreat almost as fast as you advance. However that may be, the tourist will attempt walking but once. It is a steady rise from Colorado Avenue to Rubio Canyons, which is 2200 feet above sea level.

Colorado Avenue, in the vicinity of Raymond and Fair Oakes Avenues is the business part of the city. On the western and eastern ends of this avenue and South Orange Avenue and vicinity, are located many of the most beautiful estates and elegant homes in the steepest grade of any railroad in the world, almost double that on Mount Washington.

Where the cable ends the tourist begins and a ride of three miles over the wildest, most picturesque and apparently dangerous road, ever man rode upon, winding around the mountain side, and deep canyons 2000 feet below, and crossing aerial bridges, hanging suspended from the mountain like a spider on his web, where an accident might hurl car and tourist down hundreds of feet before they touched the mountain and then crash a thousand feet lower into the deep abyss. It is a scary ride and none but fearless persons should take it.

The electric line ends at the Alpine Tavern, a large, roomy building, built of logs where roaring fires warmed the chilly air to comfort. The Tavern is 5000 feet elevation, at the head of the Grand Canyon, amid a grove of large trees and would make a delightful place for a summer outing.

From Alpine Tavern to the summit is 1100 feet and the distance three miles. It is either afoot or burro back climb. Less than half a mile away from Alpine Tavern, turning off to the right from the main trail to the summit of Mount Lowe is a narrow ridge and magnificent outlook with the valley to the left, while on the right one of the finest, most beautiful and charming pictures I ever beheld, lies spread out in the valley below, extending from mountain across the mesa to the broad Pacific and the islands beyond.

Probably more money is made in trading real estate than in any other one business.

A company will buy a large area of land, worth, perhaps, fifty or one hundred dollars an acre, and then lay out streets by the mile, dividing it into squares, put in water, gas or electricity, sewerage and everything necessary and then offer lots for sale 50x150 feet or more at a price many times larger than the land originally cost per acre. House lots on these streets are bought, re-sold at a large advance and often many times before built upon.

I was told of one young lady school teacher who speculated in house lots and made more money than by teaching.

A house lot on Fair Oakes Avenue near where I was staying was held a year ago at five hundred dollars. This year the owner refused one thousand. From below San Diego up to San Francisco immense acres of the land, oceanward and mountain-ward, is largely divided into "lots." In fact there are house lots enough for sale now to supply the immigrants into California for more than one hundred years. Streets and house lots can be seen staked out for miles and not a house in sight.

A real estate man related the following incident. A man held a claim against another for $25000. That man owned nothing with which to pay this claim except a large tract of land which he valued at $25000. He offered this and as there was nothing else to take the creditor took it and squared the account. Not very long after the new owner received a letter offering him $2500 cash for it. He immediately wrote a letter accepting the offer and went to the post office to post it. He found a letter there for him which he at once opened and it contained an offer from another party of $50,000.

He didn't put the letter he had written in but wrote an answer to the second offer accepting it and in a few days sold the land for $50,000 cash.

These are samples of the house lots.

Pasadena is growing in every direction and as a residential city is and will continue to be one of the finest and most attractive in California.

Street Railway Notes

Hon Samuel L. Mr. Claffin, however, still retains the presidency of the holding company.

CELEBRATE VILLAGE NIGHT

Mirth and neighborliness were the prevailing characteristics last Wednesday night at Bray Hall, Newton Centre, at the annual "Village Night" held under the auspices of the Newton Centre Village Improvement Association. The affair was the second one of the kind held by this enterprising organization and exceeded even the high standard established a year ago.

Prior to the banquet, which was served in the larger hall at seven o'clock, the guests were received informally in the small hall by Hon. A. B. Chapin, state treasurer, Representative Bishop, Alderman and Mrs. Albert P. Carter, ex alderman and Mrs. Charles S. Dennis, Councillor and Mrs. Seward W. Jones, and Senator and Mrs. James H. Vahey.

Exactly 426 were seated at the dining tables and Rev. E. T. Sullivan of Trinity church said grace.

For over an hour a turkey supper interspersed with jolly songs and excellent music from Boston Woman's orchestra occupied the attention of all present. Mr. Anthony Rees of Newton Highlands added greatly to the enjoyment of the occasion by singing "Gypsy John" and the solo for the Stein song and Col. James G. White sang the solo part of "Hear Dem Bells".

President Matt B. Jones presided and introduced Mr. Alfred E. Alvord by a small but decisive majority as Alderman from Ward 6. Behold in him your future representative and the citizens of Newton Centre should be congratulated that there will be at City Hall so strong and able a man, with so high a mind and so well equipped a gentleman. You have been told what the Improvement Association has done and is striving to do, if this our second Village Night shall serve to promote a better acquaintance among you and to awaken a greater civic pride, it will have served its purpose.

As the Governor Elect of New York said "It is well for us to remember that public service is the best politics." Mr. Kelsey said:

I want to say just one word about the work of the Newton Centre Improvement Association during the past year. It has been one of endeavor rather than accomplishment of our purpose. On Memorial Day we entertained the soldiers of the Militia, in the summer funds were raised and expended on the Fourth of July Celebration, the only one in our City.

The very rapid flow of the water in Crystal Lake and the flow of surface drainage into it is a question for careful consideration. We have a committee now at work endeavoring to work out some plan which shall result in diverting the flow of drainage to other points and in stopping the upsurge that is rapidly draining the lake.

Of the drinking fountain you have read recently in the local papers. The delay has been caused by the acceptance of much more elaborate plans than were at first considered and notwithstanding the necessity of raising more funds, we believe that in the near future we will be able to have this in place.

Union street has been relocated. The Association cannot claim entire credit for that, but the Committee we feel has done great work in bringing it about.

At Village Night last year the project of acquiring the lot of land bounded by Beacon and Union Street so that triangular plot can be kept open as a park, was mentioned. How far this has advanced will be told by another gentleman. I merely want to emphasize the fact that what has been done thus far is only preliminary, and the Association will put its best efforts forth in all these projects, the final results rest with the gentlemen.

We are not forgetful of our troubles in the matter of street railway and steam railway service. I can pledge the best efforts of the Association to an attempt to bring about a reasonable and satisfactory solution of that troublesome problem.

Finally and by no means out least undertaking is this gathering here tonight for the promotion of interest in things not only in this village but in our whole City, the things that Newton most needs and in which our Ward must lead.

Is not an Association that is interested in the things the Newton Centre Improvement Association is interested in, and doing the work it is doing, worthy of the active cooperation as members of everybody in this village?

It is now my privilege to introduce the gentleman who is to preside over our destinies tonight, Mr. Alfred E. Alvord. Mr. A. E. Alvord: Perhaps you do not know it, but Brother Jones has just passed through the heat and turmoil of a political campaign, during which he has been called everything and as the Minister said "The muddy pool of politics was the rock on which he split." Returns show that he was triumphantly elected by a small but decisive majority as Alderman from Ward 6. Behold in him your future representative and the citizens of Newton Centre should be congratulated that there will be at City Hall so strong and able a man, with so high a mind and so well equipped a gentleman. You have been told what the Improvement Association has done and is striving to do, if this our second Village Night shall serve to promote a better acquaintance among you and to awaken a greater civic pride, it will have served its purpose. As the Governor Elect of New York said "It is well for us to remember that public service is the best politics." Mr. Kelsey said:

The Claffin Field idea means the purchase of 1,000,000 square feet of land, 23 1/2 acres, located in the geographical center of Newton. Here we can centre all our educational work as the years go on—here we can enlarge and better equip our over-crowded high school. Here we can build a much needed manual training school—here we are going to have an up-to-date athletic field—that is assured. Here we can have an adequate gymnasium, a swimming school, a centrally located library, any and every educational building which our patriotic city fathers or our generous citizens can place there.

Of all the splendid estates in Newton, the Governor Claffin estate is the one round which pleasant memories circle. It is the place which Harriet Beecher Stowe frequently visited and called her home; where Henry Ward Beecher and many other famous and patriotic men

CITY ELECTION

The usual lack of interest in the off year between mayoralty elections resulted in the election of two Democrats to the board of aldermen, one each from Wards 3 and 4, for the one year term.

While the Republican leaders were aware of the danger of defeat, and made strong exertions to get out the vote, citizens simply would not vote, and thus allowed the Democratic nominees to win. Mr. James R. Condrin, a popular and able Democrat defeated Mr. A. Stuart Pratt by 15 votes on a total of nearly 800, while Mr. Thomas J. Lyons, another local Democratic favorite won over Alderman Beck in Ward 4 by 30 votes, in a total of less than 500. The Republican candidates in Wards 2 and 5 where other contests were made were easily successful, Alderman Hall winning a re-election by 155 majority and Mr. Lewis H. Bacon of Waban swamping Mr. Murphy with a majority of 243.

The only contest at large in the city was for school committee in Ward 2. Mr. Abbot Bassett the present incumbent being re-elected over Mr. James S. Cannon with a total vote of 2067 to 872.

No license was again carried with a vote of 2078 to 832 for Yes, margin of 1246 for the temperance element.

The apathy of the election is shown by the percentage of vote polled to the registration. The total vote of 3264 is about 51 per cent only of the registration. The women cast 217 votes for school committee or less than 30 per cent of their registration.

A recount will probably be held in Ward 3 between Mr. Condrin and Mr. Pratt, papers having been taken out for that purpose by Chairman Hatfield of the Republican city committee.

Those elected are

Aldermen at large, two years.

Ward 1, Frederick W. Stone.

Ward 2, Charles D. Cabot.

Ward 3, Frank S. Webster.

Ward 4, Frank H. Underwood.

Ward 5, Edward P. Bosson.

Ward 6, Mat B. Jones.

Ward 7, Thomas Weston, Jr.

Aldermen by ward, one year.

Ward 1, William J. Doherty.

Ward 2, Edward K. Hall.

Ward 3, James R. Condrin.

Ward 4, Thomas J. Lyons.

Ward 5, Lewis H. Bacon.

Ward 6, Allston Burr.

Ward 7, Frank A. Day.

Visits "Central"

Members of the Massachusetts Press Association and their lady friends were the guests last Monday of the New England Telephone and Telegraph Company. After a business meeting of the Association at the American House, Boston, a party of nearly a hundred ladies and gentlemen sat down to a delightful luncheon, enlivened by the strains of an orchestra. Carriages were then taken to the Company headquarters at 125 Milk street where the entire business of the Company was explained by a corps of assistants.

The operating room was an object lesson to every telephone user. That of "Main" is one of the largest in the country. The great switchboard, with 9,000 lines connecting more than 14,000 subscribers, requires nearly 200 operators at the busy hour, besides the secondary switchboard, where calls for "Main" subscribers made from other exchanges are connected up.

The number of subscribers whose calls a single operator can attend to varies according to the amount of use to which each subscriber puts the telephone, but obviously it must be limited, never exceeding 100 and frequently being as small as ten. Every operator must, however, have within her reach a means of connecting the ten or a hundred subscribers who call up at her position with any of the rest of the 14,000 they may ask for. So in front of each girl there is, in the lower part of the switchboard, a series of switch sockets technically called "jacks" with which the subscribers' signals are connected; above them the "jacks" of trunk lines to other exchanges; and in the upper part of the board the "jacks" of all the subscribers to the exchange. This arrangement of lines is repeated over and over again at each operator's position, only the lines from a particular subscriber being varied.

At the bottom of the board, where it is the provision made for the health and comfort of its employees. Every girl has her own individual telephone set which is kept carefully separated from anyone else. Lockers of expanded steel are provided for the operators to hang their clothing in. The tour of duty of eight hours is broken in the middle by a luncheon hour and the operator gets a recess of 15 or 20 minutes half way through the period before luncheon and another similar recess after luncheon. That they may spend their time off duty in the exchange pleasantly a rest room

—A peculiar automobile accident occurred on the Washington street hill, opposite Columbia street, Friday, when in an attempt to avoid a collision with a butcher wagon Mr. Harry W. Weeks of Framingham turned his automobile so sharply to the right that it ran into a stone wall with such force that two occupants were thrown out and one wheel was smashed. Mr. Weeks was running the machine down the left hand side of the street. When about abreast of a butcher wagon driven by Mr. John Callahan of Waltham the wagon unexpectedly turned into Columbia street, crossing in front of the automobile. With considerable presence of mind Mr. Weeks steered the machine across the steep thoroughfare, just grazing the butcher wagon and running into a stone wall. Both Mr. and Mrs. Weeks, who were in the machine, were bruised and shaken up by being thrown out. Mrs. Weeks was taken to her home. The automobile was left by the roadside for several hours until a repairer from Boston could lead it onto a wagon and take it off for a thorough overhauling. Mr. Weeks is a well-known Boston wholesale merchant.

As a result of inhaling quantities of lamp black while sleeping in his room in the boarding house at 16 Dunstan street, West Newton, Sunday afternoon, Henry Winnard, 45 years old, an engineer, is in a serious condition at the Newton hospital.

Winnard went to his room after dinner and lighted an oil heater. After he had fallen asleep the heater smoked until the room was dense with smoke and the furnishings were covered nearly half an inch thick with lamp black.

Finally other occupants of the boarding house smelled smoke in Winnard's room and rang in an alarm from box 212. The firemen extinguished the heater. A local physician ordered his removal to the hospital.

It is believed that the furnishings of the room were ruined. The house is owned by Mrs. Agnes A. Seaton.

In court Monday he was found guilty on the charge of drunkenness and the case placed on file.

was the cause for the defeat of two republican candidates for ward aldermen last Tuesday, and will inevitably bring about a deterioration in the high standard of our board of aldermen which has been our proud municipal boast.The defeat of Mr. Pratt in Ward Three is directly attributed to the falling off of the "hill" vote, which is strongly republican when it can be brought to the polls. Mr. Pratt's defeat will greatly handicap the Republican leaders in the future in their laudable efforts to induce the highest grade citizens to show their public spirit by serving the city as aldermen. Heretofore, it has been simply the effort to bring the public spirit of the man to the front, and to which will now be added the ever present possibility of a political defeat,
with its humiliating effect on the candidate's self esteem.Alderman Beck's defeat is doubly regretted, as he was in a position to render the city greater service during his second year, and because it leaves one of the villages without a local representative.The majority for NO license is very creditable considering the size of the total vote and emphasizes again Newton's position of strong antagonism to the open saloon.We are glad to note the election of two women on the school committee and trust their influence will be so powerful for good as to lead to a larger representation of the fair sex in that important municipal department in the future.During the past ten days residents of this city have appreciated as never before, the smoothness with which the railroad to Boston has hitherto been run.
This appreciation comes thru the difficulties and delays with which the railroad management has had to struggle
during this time. With the same equipment, and the same grade of coal as of yore, the engines have repeatedly refused to make steam. The trouble is evidently one of weather conditions and an expert investigation is under way to locate the cause. Another reason has been the lowering weather which has caused the smoke and fog to remain in the right of way, bothering the engineers with their signals. The great difficulty as the public sees it comes from the fact that if inward trains are delayed, the outward bound trains cannot be made up, as the same cars are used. With the failure to make up the outward trains, the few trains which can be utilized are literally packed with the passengers, each one determined to take the first train out. The result can be imagined and it you are a daily passenger, one experience is enough. Suffice it to say that the railroad management is using its utmost efforts to remedy
the situation.The patience of Newton citizens has been sorely tried this week by the failure of the contractor to remove the ashes
on schedule time. The cause is said to have been drunken teamsters and the weather and efforts have been made the last few days to catch up with the work and to again meet the regular routine.

and women were wont to assemble and discuss great questions—entertained under those magnificent old elms by the first lady of the Commonwealth—at the home of the patriotic, generous, largehearted governor of Massachusetts. This home, we the citizens of Newton are going to purchase and present the city of Newton for a civic centre and to perpetuate some of the work and ideals of our former governor.In the development of this country
there have been two ideals which have done more for its advancement, more for the elevation of the people than any other. They are not the ideal to get rich or the ideal to get power, but they are devotion to God and devotion to country. These two ideals have taken men out of themselves—these two ideals have demanded personal service—personal sacrifice. Compare for a moment in your own minds the relative influence of the two ideals—get rich and get power—with the other two, service of God and devotion to country—on the one hand toward selfishness or on the other hand toward usefulness.During the last five or six years, we have erected in Newton for the worship
of God and in the spirit of self-sacrifice and devotion, four new churches at an expense of nearly $400,000; each has been built without debt and each one has been a blessing to every contributor. In the act of building these four churches we have shown our devotion to the service of God.
From our parents we have inherited in a large measure the prosperity
and good fortunes which their sacrifice gave to our country. Are we to sit still —to enjoy them all and to do nothing for posterity?The acquisition of the Clafin Park is simply a patriotic idea, an expression of personal responsibility for the best development of our city. Think of the advantage to the city of Boston of the plan
by its early settlers to lay out the Common and later the Public Garden. Com-pare for a moment Boston with these two open spaces round which the city has grown and centered, with Boston without them. The acquisition of the Clafin field will mean the elimination of the boundary lines between the nine villages of Newton, and will make it one great city—will assure its future development toward one city rather than toward nine villages.A new spirit of patriotism is developing in our midst; no one can say that our aldermen or our school committee men are not selected from among our best citizens—our busiest men—our honest and honorable men. This condition of things has brought about a new order of affairs in Newton. The spirit of service and self-sacrifice of our public servants is becoming contagious. Little by little our citizens are realizing their personal responsibility for Newton. From now on we are going to do things—not in the John B. Moran style but in the Frank D. Day style. Under the leadership and generosity of Mr. Day the Clafin Park idea will become a reality.Over $7,000 has already been subscribed for the Clafin field by the patriotic citizens of Chestnut Hill and Newton Centre, and because of our location in this ward, our distance from the Clafin
field, the attitude of these contributors
has been of great importance and influence on the success of this project. Chestnut Hill and Newton Centre have shown the other parts of Newton an unselfish spirit—have shown that they believe in Newton and its future. By your generosity Clafin field will become a reality, and the future development of this fair city will be upon a saner, more unselfish level, and will always stand for patriotic citizenship, and when Clafin
field has become a reality and the different buildings shall rise from time to time, we shall all have the same satisfaction in the service rendered our city
and our country; that we have been enjoying the last few years in building the new churches which represent our service to God.This letter from Cong. Weeks was read.

that I am well at present and hope that you are enjoying the same state of health.

With the possible exception of the telegram from Seward Jones, saying that he had selected me to be a member of Congress, nothing has ever pleased me quite so much as your cordial invitation to attend the 50th Annual Banquet of N. C. I. A. of N. C. Middlesex C. Mass. U. S. A. and speak for an hour or two on "What the World owes Newton and What Newton owes its Creditors."

An invitation of this kind brings the recipient to a realizing sense of just how one of your neighbors feels when he receives notice of an election to membership in the Neighbors' Club. Please give the Association my very best thanks for this exceptional honor. Say to them for me that in my opinion the Newton Centre Improvement Association is a general and no plus ultra. Say, moreover, that if there is anything which I can do for the Association here in Washington without prejudice to the rest of the United States and disturbance to our foreign relations, and, worst of all, stirring up the President, I shall be most happy to do it.

Can you tell me if there is a car down Centre street on Fridays. I have an impression that Friday is the day the car goes up. I remember running once for a Centre Street car on Tuesday. I asked the conductor why he was in such a hurry. He apologized and said that that car was Monday's car and he was trying to catch up with the schedule.

There was a very tall gentleman from your town, with a high hat and an Amherst college accent down here a few days ago, collecting money for church. He pleaded so hard that I finally gave him $5 and took his personal receipt with a free sample copy of the Youths' Companion as collateral. Will you kindly see that the church gets the $2?

Parting is such sweet sorrow, as Dennis says, that I leave my regrets to the very end. Believe me, I am profoundly grieved to decline your more than kind invitation.

Remember me most affectionately to all inquiring friends, regardless of party, and command my services at your pleasure.

Politically, financially, socially, and most sincerely yours

JOHN W. WEEKS.

Dear Sir:—Recently in New York city, I picked up in a hotel lobby a copy of the New York American and Journal, published as I understand, under the same auspices as the Boston American. My attention was at once attracted by the usual glaring headlines to an article purporting to be an account of the meeting of the bible class of young John D. Rockefeller, Jr., and in which, according to this article in the New York Journal, the lesson was devoted in part to the discussion of the virtues of mince pie. As I had attended the meetings of the bible class for the three preceding Sundays, on one of which the conduct of the class was turned over to Dr. C. F. Woman's World

Conducted by MISS GRACE M. BURT.

*Extracts from address delivered at the Literature Conference of the St. Paul Biennial.

All those familiar with the Woman's Club Movement in America know that the literary club was the foundation stone of all club life, and out of the literary life of the club have grown other philanthropic and sympathetic club endeavors. From the egotistical desire to improve ourselves we have branched out in the altruistic desire to better the conditions of others. But it is evident, in many ways, that the pendulum has swung far away from its starting-point, and the literary impulse for club life is fast being obscured by the activities of the civic and philanthropic clubs of the day.

This condition of affairs might be expected of the American temperament, for, as Dr. Woodrow Wilson says, the true American spirit is that of the pioneer, the man who is ever pressing on, hewing a way for himself, and is looking out for new sensations, new activities.

The Woamn's Literary Club has an important place in our community life, and, wisely used, it is a means to a much-needed end. Made up, as it is of women of various ages, intellectual, educational, and social attainments, it represents a constituency that is bound together by a desire for development of something higher and better than the material life.

Literature should have a place in every one's life, no matter what the intellectual equipment is, and the Woman's Literary Club has been an expression of the literary need, which must be counted in summing up American conditions.

Considering the national tendencies of the American people and the characteristics of the constituency of our Literary Clubs, we say without hesitation that the Woman's Literary Club is not a place for serious study, but a centre for the dissemination of a general culture and a moral force for good.

In these clubs a woman of deep learning and broad education meets with the woman whose opportunities for education have been limited, and who is now struggling for more information and a wider intellectual outlook.

Both these women are gainers by their contact in the Literary Club, for they will both gain true culture if the ideal club spirit is adhered to. One gains culture of heart in learning to understand the longings and the needs of her less educated sister, and in giving out of her wealth of intellectual attainment, she enriches her own soul and fills the other's mind with the beautiful thoughts and ideals of the student world.

Again, the time given by women to club work must necessarily be too scrappy and piece-meal to be suitable for serious study. No average home-maker, who is our typical club woman, has the right to be absorbed in any one topic which will preclude the interruptions which must come in a normal home life. Hence our typical club woman should not be a serious student.

Do not understand me to imply any disparagement in saying that the Literary Club is not a place for serious study.

On the contrary, to my mind, in place of serious study it offers an opportunity for a special training which can be attained nowhere else, and which is a part of the development of a symmetrical womanly character.

Namely: First, a methodical, orderly training of parliamentary law which provides for hearing for all, and teaches that, while there is protection for the rights of the minority, the law of the democracy is the rule of the majority. Second, a mental stimulus which is found in all intercourse with one's fellows, a mental exercise which arouses latent faculties and puts into action intellectual forces, when one speaks before an audience and is conscious of possible criticism. This is all a very human part of the intellectual life; but often it is only through emulation that we can attain achievements. And, third, that sympathetic, unprofessional understanding of another's mental needs.

Serious study is not the purpose of the Woman's Literary Club as it exists in America today, but instead, a broad culture and higher plane of living and thinking is attained by many women through membership in a well-organized, properly conducted Literary Club.—Federation Bulletin.

The Monday Club of Newton Highlands considered the "Commerce of India" at its meeting on December 3. Three papers were presented and Mrs. Chandler, a returned missionary from India, spoke of the manufactures and products of the country. The club will meet next week with Mrs. Gorton Berkley street, West Newton.

The Newtonville Woman's Guild met on Tuesday afternoon of last week at the New Church parlors. Dr. Clapp gave a most interesting account of "Modern Methods of Treating Pulmonary Tuberculosis." The talk was illustrated by stereopticon and gave the members a very different and more cheerful idea of the subject than they had anticipated. Tea was served by the Hospital Committee who had charge of the program for the afternoon.

The Social Science Club held its monthly business meeting on Dec. 5. Reports were received from the various committees, the most important of which were the reports of the Vacation Industrial School and the School Gardens. The club voted to raise the $400 necessary for running the school another year, the city assuming a like amount, as has been done for the past two years. Details of the work done at the vacation school have already been published at the time of the exhibition of the school in the summer. The results of the gardens were surprising considering the facilities at hand. One hundred and six gardens were cared for by as many children and 100 more children applied for them who were unable to be accommodated. There were many lessons learned by these children in the care of their gardens other than a knowledge of making plants grow, chief among which was that of respect for the rights and property of others. One enterprising boy made for himself a garden at home from the interest awakened by the school plot and at the end of the season took first prize at Horticultural Hall for home gardens.

The Waban Woman's Club met last week Monday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Clinton M. Hill, Windsor road.

After the regular business meeting the ladies present were entertained by Mr. Pietra Isola, who delivered a charming lecture on Italy, the land of his birth and education. With the aid of stereopticon views his descriptions of the country, cities and their many attractions were especially interesting.

Mr. Isola spoke mostly on the parts of Italy not frequented by the traveller.

The next meeting will be December 17th at the home of Mrs. Fernando H. Woods, Pine Ridge road. Mrs. R. B. Truitt of Newton Centre will talk to club members on Songs for Children.

The committee of the morning, Mrs. Almy, Mrs. Hermon, Mrs. Blood and Mrs. Bridgeman, read instructive and interesting papers on Correggio, the "Painter of the Golden Age," Michael Angelo's Life, Michael Angelo, Sculptor, Architect and Poet, and the Sistine Chapel, all beautifully illustrated by the Newton Library photographs which are adding greatly, this year, to the pleasure and profit of the Review Club's study. The next meeting will be Miss Porter's lecture on "Great Names of Venice," in the Congregational chapel, on the morning of Dec. 31.

The last meeting of the Pierian Club was held Dec. 3, with Mrs. Wm. Garrison Eliot. The papers for the afternoon were as follows: Clams and Oysters, Mrs. Hemphill; Octopi, Mrs. Nutt; The Chambered Nautilus" by Mrs. Gallison. Thursday evening, Dec. 6, the ladies of the Club entertained the gentlemen with a bowling party at the Newton Highlands Clubhouse. A large number were present and everyone had a "jolly time." Mr. S. A. Thompson was the fortunate gentleman who received first prize for the highest score. Mr. John Titus received the consolation prize. At half after ten refreshments were served.

This party was one more in the series begun by the ladies last winter, and as each one closes, it adds more and more to the popularity of such parties.

At the meeting of the Monday Club of Newton Highlands on Dec. 10 there were papers on the Discoveries and Inventions of India. The club will meet next week with Mrs. Luitwieler and there will be Christmas readings and music.

The subject to be considered by the Social Science Club next week will be "The Evils of the Instalment System of Purchases." Paper by Mrs. V. B. Swett.

The Newtonville Woman's Guild met on Tuesday afternoon of last week at the New Church parlors. Dr. Clapp gave a most interesting account of "Modern Methods of Treating Pulmonary Tuberculosis." The talk was illustrated by stereopticon and gave the members a very different and more cheerful idea of the subject than they had anticipated. Tea was served by the Hospital Committee who had charge of the program for the afternoon.

The Social Science Club held its monthly business meeting on Dec. 5. Reports were received from the various committees, the most important of which were the reports of the Vacation Industrial School and the School Gardens. The club voted to raise the $400 necessary for running the school another year, the city assuming a like amount, as has been done for the past two years. Details of the work done at the vacation school have already been published at the time of the exhibition of the school in the summer. The results of the gardens were surprising considering the facilities at hand. One hundred and six gardens were cared for by as many children and 100 more children applied for them who were unable to be accommodated. There were many lessons

LITTLE MISS ROSAMOND.
By NINA RHODES. Author of "Only Dolly," "Winifred's Neighbors," "The Little Girl Next Door," "Children on the Top Floor," etc. Illustrated by BERTHA G. DAVISON. 12mo Cloth Lothrop, Lee & Shepard Co., Boston. There is an assured welcome for each new one of the "Brick House Books," as the unique and attractive covers given to the books of Miss Nina Rhoades cause them to be called. Rosamond is found in Richmond, Va., with her good big brother. The latter, however, cannot give her all the comfort that she needs in the trying hot weather, and she goes to the seaside cottage of an uncle whose home is in New York. Here it is her good fortune to find herself a neighbor to Gladys and Joy, so well known in a previous book, "The Little Girl Next Door," and after some complications are straightened out, bringing Rosamond's honesty and kindness of heart to prominence, all are made very happy by many nice things that seem to happen at the same time. [Price, $1.00.]

BLIND ALLEYS.

By GEORGE CARY EGGLESTON. Author of "Dorothy South," "A Carolina Cavalier," etc. Illustrated by E. POLLAK. 12mo Cloth Lothrop, Lee & Shepard Co., Boston.

In "Blind Alleys" George Cary Eggleston enters upon a new field of fiction, casts his work in a larger mould than any that he has hitherto used, and gives us altogether the most important novel that he has yet written.

"Blind Alleys" is a novel of New York life—not of Wall street, not of Fifth avenue, and not of the slums, but of the more typical and significant aspects of life in the great city, and of those who constitute its real and not its exceptional population. The book is full of these curious and intricate mysteries of life that abound in a great city, and fuller still of earnest thought and sincere endeavor to discover a way out of the "blind alleys" in which men and women who try to help their fellows are apt to find themselves helplessly groping. No ready-made solutions are offered of any of the problems presented by the action of the story, but the suggestions made by the variably prejudiced personages of the drama will be helpful to those who sincerely seek a way out. There is a sweet and wholesome love story of course. Indeed, there are two of them, and altogether the novel is one of peculiarly fascinating interest. In appearance, it is one of the handsomest novels of the year. [Price, $1.50.]

WITH MASK AND MITT.
Fourth volume "Phillips-Exeter Series" By A. T. DUDLEY. Illustrated by CHARLES COPELAND. 12mo Cloth Lothrop, Lee & Shepard Co., Boston.

The books of the Phillips-Exeter Series have become standard on account of the accurate athletic knowledge presented, the excellent pictures of American boarding-school life that are given, and the thoroughly manly quality everywhere in evidence. Two have dealt with foot-ball and one with baseball as central features of their descriptions of school life and development. "With Mask and Mitt" continues the subject of baseball, although very much more than merely a baseball story, and finds Phil Poole, the clever young hero of "Making the Nine," a dignified senior and the captain of the first nine. In the search for new players a promising pitcher from among the new students is soon brought into prominence, while the fact is not recognized that he owes much of his success to the quiet and consistent head work of another new student who has come from the same school and has been his catcher. The drifting of the former lad towards the fast set and the unprofitableness of it all furnishes opportunity for the most serious and able study. Mr. Dudley has yet given us, while the constant progress of his discouraged but resolute classmate, whose ultimate triumph comes in connection with the thrilling big game which closes the season, is told in a way that makes old boys feel young again. Athletic science, rousing good fun, and wholesome character-building are well combined. [Price, $1.25.]

A new book of especial interest to residents of Newton is "HEALTH THROUGH SELF-CONTROL" In Thinking, Breathing, Eating," by William Anthony Spinnley, who for twenty-three years was connected with the public schools of this city as principal of the Mason School, Newton Centre. Mr. Spinnley has also had a thorough training in medicine and anatomy and is very well known in and around Boston as a teacher of physical and mental culture, and has put the results of years of thought and observation into an exceptionally practical and valuable book.

He points the way to health and happiness in a thoroughly sane and scientific manner which is made all the more effective by a pleasing style and by the fact that the author assumes no position in advance of his own definite knowledge. He gives ample attention to the power of mind over bodily functions, and emphasizes the importance of correct breathing, upon which he has long been an authority, and discusses fully the nervous system and how the mind may build the body healthfully. Much space is also given to the science and art of habit-formation, and the effect upon health. The important matters of eating and digestion are treated most ably, and in connection with each subject we are shown how we may make ourselves in every way better and happier by the simple exercise of knowledge and self-direction that can be at the command of each. The book will have a wide-spread influence.

The following subjects are treated:—1. Breathing, 2. Diaphragmatic Breathing, 3. Various Facts on Breathing, 4. The Sympathetic and Cerebro-Spinal Nerve System, "The Sub-Conscious and the Conscious Mind," How the Mind Builds the Body Healthfully, 5. Inhibition, How Habits, Customs, Beliefs, Opinions, Conversations, Acts, may produce Health, 6. The Science and Art of Habit-Formation, Character and Health Building, 7. How to Eat Healthfully, 8. Spiritual Health.

This book will be published December 15th by Lothrop, Lee & Shepard Co., 93 Federal St., Boston. Price $1.20 net. Postpaid $1.30.

TWO LITTLE FRIENDS IN NORWAY.

First volume of "Two Little Friends

Series" By MARGARET SIDNEY. Author of the famous Pepper Books, etc. Illustrated by HERMANN HEYER. 12mo Cloth Lothrop, Lee & Shepard Co., Boston.

Every one knows of the popularity of the Pepper Books, and it is good news that this author has enthusiastically entered upon a new series of books in an entirely different field, but with the same elements of interest that have endeared her previous books to hundreds of thousands.

A bright little American girl of seven, with her mother, were members of a party of Americans travelling in Norway and the mother is, by chance, the means of causing a great deal to happen in the life of a little Norwegian girl of the same age. Later the two children are brought together and become fast friends. The quaint features of the country, about which the author is thoroughly informed, the cleverly drawn personality of the various tourists, and finally the bringing together of the two little lives, so widely different in their previous course, and yet so ready for friendship through the common impulses of childhood, are drawn in the author's best vein. Abundant action, keen humor and remarkable power for portraying character are well-known qualities of Margaret Sidney, and they have never been displayed to better advantage than in this new and handsome book. [Price, $1.25.]

Literary Notes

The second instalment of Ernest Russell's forceful series, "The Sons of the Settlers," running in this well edited magazine, is a remarkably good essay on the genesis of the pioneer spirit. Mr. Russell ably delineates how the New England pioneers "built upon piles of their own driving," to quote Thoreau, and succeeds admirably in convincing the reader that the poverty of the settlers had its compensations, both in their own lives and in shaping the national character. "The Christmas Dance at Jimmy Friday's," by Sid Howard, a story of the lumber woods, is sure to touch the heart of every one possessed of the Santa Claus spirit. In "Dutch Corner Days," by Roscoe Brumbaugh, this able writer tells in a quaintly humorous manner the story of a smash-up at a love-fest, which is an event in a little Pennsylvania community. "Vivienne," by F. L. Harding, is a cleverly written romance of the Canadian wilderness. In "With the Mountain Cowboys," Edwin L. Sabin side-steps the shooting, swearing and swaggering cowboys of story and stage, and shows them still mighty interesting as they really are. "Jungle-Hunting in Panama," by Holton C. Carl, makes fascinating reading and is probably the first authentic report by one who has "been there." "Doc and His Buck," by Ernest McCaffey, tells of the taking of a noted buck deer which had long evaded the best hunters in Arkansas. "High Ground in Fox Hunting," by Gen. Roger D. Williams, is a superbly illustrated and finely written article. Other good features are "A County Gone Mad," by J. Williams Macy, Jr.; "The Passing of Reel-Paw," by Dennis H. Stovall; "Cruising the Fjords of the North Pacific," by D. W. and A. S. Iddings; and "The Football Season in the East," by W. N. Morice. The departments are replete with the best of information, and the December Recreation is decidedly the best number that has appeared.

RANDY'S LOYALTY.
Seventh volume of the "Randy Books" By AMY BROOKS. Illustrated by the author. 12mo Cloth Lothrop, Lee & Shepard Co., Boston.

Loyalty to others furnishes the keynote of the seventh of the favorite "Randy Books." Loyalty to her family leads her to give up a most alluring invitation to visit the best loved of her many friends in the city, in order that she may for a time take the place of her aunt as mistress of her neglected farm, and loyalty to her friends finds exercise in tactfully restraining the envious spirits of those who are rivals for her favor. Her devotion to her little sister, Poole, is touchingly brought out. With it all, there are many good times, and the quaint country neighbors are, if possible, more amusing than ever. The "Randy Books" are gems in appearance, and commendable in every way. [Price, $1.00.]

DOROTHY DAINTY IN THE CITY.
Fifth volume of "Dorothy Dainty Series" By AMY BROOKS. Illustrated by the author. 12mo Cloth Lothrop, Lee & Shepard Co., Boston.

Dorothy's parents, with her well-loved governess, "Aunt Charlotte" Grayson, and her devoted little friend, Nancy Ferris, take up their home in the city for the winter. Acquaintances of the previous summer welcome them, and their favorite little friends from Merriaville visit them, and all have delightful times. The scheming uncle of Nancy, however, has not ceased his attempts to get her into his possession, and his temporary success in so doing and Nancy's bravery throughout all form a thrilling and touching part of the story. It is easy to see why each new "Dorothy Dainty" book commands a much larger circle of little readers, and the artistic appearance of all Miss Brooks' books is fully maintained.

About Town

The public schools close today and reopen Wednesday Jan. 2.

Chairman Hatfield of the Republican city committee entertained a number of gentlemen over Sunday at his camp at Centre Harbor, N. H. The result of the ward three election was the principal subject of conversation.

An old Newton patron of the Boston
& Albany suggests that we continue patient with the present management. He feels confident that this branch of the New York Central will attach passenger trains, before long, to its freight trains for the accommodation of its suburban traffic.

An indignation meeting was held last evening in Bray Hall, Newton Centre
under the auspices of the Village Improvement Association to protest against the present unsatisfactory service by the steam and electric roads. A full account will be given in our next issue.

Jumping from an outward train Wednesday night, after it had started to pull out of the Newton station, Paul R. Jepson, 23 years old, married, and living at 65 Jefferson street, had his right hand cut off at the wrist.

After Jepson had been hurried to the Newton hospital the dismembered hand was found between the rails by Theodore R. Parmenter, of the freight department of the railroad. Jepson was on the train which arrived at Newton at 6.23. Running to the platform he swung off but slipped on the ice at the westerly end of the Centre-place bridge and his hand went under the wheels. Several hackmen and railroad employees heard the man's screams for help.

Jepson is a son of Mr. and Mrs.
George E. Jepson, with whom he lived at 65 Jefferson street. He had been married but a few months. He was employed in Boston in the insurance business.

furthering the enterprise. The motive behind the work is civic responsibility, to show the immigrant the American standard of living. In closing Miss Dudley said that while there is no direct religious teaching at the Settlement they are "translating God's love in terms of brotherly ministration to the needs of the body."

A short parliamentary drill was held under the leadership of Mrs. Anna L. Bailey before the lecture, while at the close there was a sale of fancy articles and cake and candy for the benefit of the club.

The Federation Bulletin for December gives the following greeting from Mrs. Sarah S. Platt Decker, President of the General Federation:

A Merry-Christmas and a Happy New Year to all the Club Women of the Land!

Surely, no organization has more reason to rejoice and make merry than our own. Successful in legislation during the past year; a great Biennial Convention, with not a discordant note throughout; splendid progress in strengthening the tie that binds us; increasing acquaintance and affection between the women of the different States; hundreds of happy club days, lifting many out of the sometime monotonous routine of life; fine successful work for nation, State, and community; increase of power and privilege; veritable and far-reaching recognition from our brother man and a shoulder to shoulder comradeship with him in work and plans; shall we not have thankful hearts, and glad?

Have we, then, only success, no failures? Impossible; plenty of the latter; but an honest failure in honest work should not cause one moment of repining. I love those stirring words of the poet,—

"You are beaten to earth? Well, well, what's that?

Come up with a smiling face.

It's nothing against you to fall down flat.

But to lie there, that's disgrace!

Last year I sent three wishes, which were the desire of my heart for the women of the Federation. Every day of this good year has brought fulfillment of all three. Once more I send them for this Christmas Day,—epitomized into a tenet for the Federation, for every club, and for every member thereof, in the coming year in all study or work undertaken:

Never frown,—never sigh,— And keep step.

SARAH S. PLATT DECKER.

THEATRES

Keith's Theatre—Christmas Week is distinctly Children's Week at Keith's and has been for several years past. Special attention is given to selection of acts and those appealing particularly to the youngsters are the ones picked out for the holiday program. Christmas trees for the little folks are provided on every floor and each child receives a present when leaving the theatre. A special feature in the nature of a most delightful surprise has been prepared for this season, something that will be appreciated by the old as well as the young. Those who go to the theatre Monday, the 24th, will be the first to find out what this surprise is. As for the show itself, no more welcome announcement could possibly be made than that the leading feature will be Master Gabriel, the original "Buster." He is to appear in the laughable sketch, "Auntie's Visit," with George Ali as "Spike," Buster's dog.

Cameron and Flanagan, two comedians from the West who have made a pronounced success in their sketch of stage life, "On and Off," Gillett's Dogs, great troupe of trained canines; Elmer Tenley, with his droll Irish character monologue; the Wesselys, whose wonderful juggling act has made such a hit this week, the Crane Brothers, in their new skit, "The Mudtown Lock-up" Cooper and Robinson, the cleverest colored entertainers now in vaudeville; Professor Allieni and his educated monkey, "Peter the Great"; Seymour and Hill, acrobatic comedians; Graham Harris, a brilliant young violinist who will be accompanied by Miss Dorothy Harris; Daisy Dumont, comedienne; Count De Butz and brother, cycling humorists; Kenny and Hollis, cross-fire conversationalists and parodists; Henry and Francis, sketcharians, and the Kinetograph will complete the feast.

Claflin Guard Notes

Scores of the Company's friends, as well as the members themselves, are eagerly awaiting New Year's eve to come, when an invitation party will be given at the Armory.

Following closely on this comes the Annual Prize Drill which will be held Monday evening, January 14th. The following committee was appointed to make arrangements for the drill: Lieut. Coulter, Sergt. Love, Corp. Wenmouth, Priv. Sennott, and Priv. Reynolds.

Private Davis has been elected treasurer of the Company, for one year, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of 1st Sergt. R. G. Muldoon. Sergt. Muldoon regrettably handing in his resignation for business reasons.

Street Railway Notes

The new waiting station at Belcher's Corner, Newton Highlands, now being erected by the Boston & Worcester Street Railway Co., is to be heated by electricity, which will be much appreciated by the great number of people who use the cars in that vicinity.

The cars on the Upper Falls line were held up a half hour Monday morning on account of the derailing of a car at Belcher's corner, where the new spacial work joins the track. High school pupils were late to school inconveniences.

The Waltham aldermen have granted the street railway company the right to act as a common carrier of freight. In return the street railway renews its transfer privileges in Waltham and a portion of Newton and agrees to run its Lexington cars to the railroad track.

BELGRADE RUG COMPANY. Worn-out and cast-off carpets are not useless, after all. The Belgrade Rug Company, at 32 Hollis street, Boston, Mass., have a way of re-making them in such a way that they not only make a beautiful appearance but that they prove durable in the use of them. Don't throw away your old carpets when they seem hopeless. See what the Belgrade Rug Company can do with them, no matter how torn and unattractive. They issue a circular which states briefly what goods make the handsomest rugs, etc., as well as price list and shipping directions.

The GRAPHIC editorial of last week
anted the recent city election has been severely criticized by some as a reflection on the character and standing of the gentlemen elected as ward aldermen in wards three and four. Nothing was further from the thoughts of the editor
when the article in question was penned.
He was expressing his opinion as a Republican and addressing members of the Republican party and that party alone.
The deterioration feared in the character of our city government was to be in the future candidates of the Republican party, and had absolutely no reference to the election just held.

From long personal friendship with one of the Democratic aldermen elect and from general favorable report of the other, the editor of the GRAPHIC believes that the city of Newton will receive just as honest and conscientious service from them as from their Republican associates.

POOR SERVICE

A dozen or more Newton residents including Alderman Weston, R. C. Emery, L. P. Bowers, H. R. Viets, Henry Haake, W. H. Partridge, W. C. Bates, R. E. Mandell, and T. E. Eustis, were present last Monday morning at the hearing given by the Railroad Commissioners at their Boston office on the charges made by Mr. Eustis against the management of the Boston Elevated Railway.

The charges were substantially as follows:

That none of the cars on the Cottage
Farm-Newton line are sufficiently lighted, even when all the lamps are in use and including cars with 16-lamps;—that these cars are "habitually" without heat
between certain hours in the afternoon,
and have been for at least two years (passengers are informed by the conductors that the Company did not allow them to use the heat between 4 and 7 in the afternoon)—that delays and disorders between conductors and motor-men have been common and frequent at Oak Square,—that unnecessary and vexatious delays are caused by the frequent changing of conductors and motormen
by the company.

General Bancroft explained the attitude of the railway company. He said the company recognized all the obligations stated by the complainants, and that it did not wish to antagonize anybody; but that two years ago the Newton
City Government had taken measures to restrict the number of cars that could be run to Nonantum Sq. because of the obstruction occasioned for other traffic by reason of cars standing in the square. The company agreed that more cars were needed on the line. The general said in response to a suggestion from William C. Bates that it would be possible to run the cars through Nonantum square to Watertown square, unless this, in the opinion of the Railroad Commission, would involve waste of miles. The company had never deemed it necessary.

It was complained that many cars after finishing their run to Nonantum square
return to Oak square barns empty, refusing to pick up would-be passengers who merely want to ride as far as the car goes. General Bancroft said that if this was so, it was an absolute infraction of orders, that conductors had frequently been disciplined for such refusals, and that every passenger car that was moving was supposed to carry passengers for the part of the route which it covered. Complainants urged that these refusals had been going on for years, and that when the conductors announced that the cars were bound for the barns only, they did it in such a manner that would-be passengers understood that no one was expected to ride.

Some question arising as to how effectively the patrons had attempted to bring their complaints to the attention of the railway officials, Chairman Jackson
read from General Bancroft's letter
replying to the charges, in which the general stated that no complaint had been sent "to this office" for a considerable time. The general said he meant by that phrase, the president's office of the company; but the chairman and the complainants understood that he had meant that no complaints had been made to the company through any of its officials,
and this was gainsaid by appeals for improvement made from time to time to Superintendent of Transportation Rugg, Vice President Sergeant, and the interim was in the Warren cemetery
on Tuesday.

At the residence of Mr. Charles B.
Moore on Summer street, Newton Centre,
last Saturday occurred the death of his mother, Mrs. Sarah H. Moore. She was born in Warren 69 years ago. The funeral was held from the family residence Monday afternoon at 3.30 o'clock, Rev. E. T. Sullivan officiating, and the interment was in the Warren cemetery
on Tuesday.

Miss Jennie W. Whiton, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ezra J. Whiton, passed away at her home on Church street,
Wednesday, of pneumonia after a brief illness. She had been active in the work of Channing church since she came to Newton and was one of the assistants
at the Newton Free Library. Miss Whiton was much loved and respected by all who knew her and had a large circle of friends. She is survived by her parents, three sisters, and one brother.
The funeral will be held from the Channing church parlors this afternoon at 2 o'clock.

Mrs. Nellie A. Watkins, wife of Charles H. Watkins, was stricken with heart failure Monday evening near the corner of Washington and Copley street
while on her way home from a visit in Maynard. She reeled and fell before assistance could be given by two women who were near her. Officer Dearborn gave what aid he could and Dr. Charles L. Pearson was called from his residence near by but she was dead when he reached her side. The remains were removed to the family residence on Grasmere street where services were held Wednesday afternoon at one o'clock.
Rev. Richard T. Loring officiated and the burial was in Cleveland, Ohio. Mrs.
Watkins is survived by her husband but no children.

Mrs. Charlotte L. Read, aged 87, widow of Charles A. Read, the donor of the Read fund in this city, died Wednesday morning after a long illness.

Mrs. Read was born in Charleston.
She had for many years been a resident of Newton, making her home at 62
St. James street. She is survived by a son. The funeral will take place this afternoon at 2 p.m. at her late home.

Newton Club Tuesday evening.

On Wednesday evening Mr. E. C.
Culver, veteran stage driver, who has spent twenty years in the Yellowstone National Park, gave a lecture on the park illustrated by moving pictures. Mr.
Culver was assisted by Mr. E. B.
Thompson, formerly connected with the Interior Department, Washington, D.
C., and Mr. George Breck, superintendent of the Yellowstone Park Transportation Company.

Wilcox-Peters

Miss Mary Edith Peters, the daughter of Mrs. George E. Peters of West Newton was married to Mr. William H. Wilcox of Waterbury, Conn., last Tuesday evening. The ceremony took place at 7:30 o'clock at the home of the bride, 59 Prince street, and the wedding knot was tied by Rev. Julian C. Jaynes of the West Newton Unitarian church.

The bride, who was gowned in white satin, was accompanied by Mrs. Paul Hamilton of Waterbury, Conn., as matron of honor, while Mr. Levi Wilcox, brother of the groom was the best man. A reception followed the ceremony until ten o'clock, Mr. and Mrs. Wilcox being assisted in receiving their many friends by Mrs. George E. Peters, Mrs. Frederick Wilcox and Mrs. Hamilton. Dr. Dudley Denning and Mr. Paul Hamilton of Waterbury, Conn., and Mr. Edwin Peters of West Newton were the ushers. The house was tastily decorated with smilax, white chrysanthemums and roses, while Daggett's orchestra furnished the music. Mr. and Mrs. Wilcox will reside in Asheville, N. C.

Tennis Courts Minstrels

A roof garden scenic effect, with green background, little trees, Japanese lanterns, colored lights, and seated around tables dark-hued ladies in gay dresses and picture hats, with colored escorts in light summer costumes, formed the pleasing setting for another artistically and financially successful minstrel entertainment, by the members of the Wabash Tennis Courts, last week Friday and Saturday nights. The girls were Messrs. Lane, D. M. Hill, Lamkin and Gilmore, the men, Knott, Parker, Fisher and Robinson. The fun creating end men, in exaggerated waiter's costumes were Boston, Buffum, Merrill and Angier and Mr. C. C. Blaney again appeared, an imitable interlocutor.

Pretty music, catchy local words, and plenty of snap, characterized the first part, the choruses were smoothly sung and the solos worthy of the frequent encores, which called forth witty little verses. Flowers, lemons and other favors were not spared by the audience which from the start caught the spirit of fun, even joining in on the encore of Mr. Robinson's song "Don't you want a paper, dearie?" The other numbers enthusiastically received were, "Nobody", Mr. Angier; "Since Thou Art Mine", Mr. Fisher; "Say, Wouldn't it be a dream?", Mr. Merrill; "Sympathy" Mr. Buffum; "Nothin' from Nothin'" leaves You" Mr. Bosson.

The second half of the program, introduced by an overture written and played by Miss Jessie G. Gould and Miss Bertha Cook at the piano forte and Miss Anna E. Webster violinist; consisted of four vaudeville acts, if possible better than those of previous shows.

Mr. R. O. Brigham in a sketch entitled "Father's Model" added laurels to his reputation as a character actor in female parts and his costumes, and singing in "It's All Right in the Summertime" and "The Bird on Nellie's Hat" made one of the big hits of the evening. He was silently, but ably assisted by Mr. Blaney as Father."

Mr. Buffum, Mr. Robinson and Miss Knott again appeared together, in five farce, entitled the "Music Master". Three songs were introduced "My Marriucha", "Milo" and the duet "I don't know where I'm going" (not to mention the whistling contest), were well rendered. The sketch introduced Miss Knott, who as Milo, made a distinct hit in a graceful dance with special lights, and a flowing white and gold dancing girls costume.

The company formerly ran more cars between Oak square and Newton upon the Boston Elevated railway, the Railroad Commissioners report as follows:

Patriots upon the Oak square line of the Boston Elevated railway system assert that for a long time cars between Oak square and Newton have been inadequate in number, insufficiently lighted and heated, and that unnecessary and provoking delays have been frequent. That there is just ground for this complaint is beyond doubt, and therefore the question as to whether the failure of the company to fully perform its obligations has been continuous or infrequent is of less importance than the present assurance of the management that the ground of complaint will be removed and the service made what it ought to be.

The company formerly ran more cars between Oak square and Newton, but in compliance with a request from city officials discontinued some of them. In our opinion more cars are needed to properly accommodate the travel between these points. The situation is not one where such additional accommodation would mean a choice between overcrowding cars and overcrowding tracks.

For the annoying delays which have accompanied changes of crew there is no good reason. When such changes are made, and it is necessary that they be made at certain times, it should be without substantial interruption in the running of the cars.

A Veteran's Birthday

A birthday worth keeping was celebrated by the friends of the venerable John S. Maxwell of Newtonville, Dec. 17, at his home 410 Newtonville avenue. Eighty years ago he was born at Wells, York Co., Me., but has been a well-known citizen of Boston for more than sixty years. For a long time he was a member of the old hand-engine fire company, Extinguisher 5, and in his trade as a mason rose from a day-laborer to the position of a contractor, with Major William M. Rumery, as his partner. Monuments of his work, built since the Civil War, are the old Boston and Albany Depot, the Mechanics building, the South Boston Gas Works, the Freight Building in South Boston, and the Odd Fellows' Hall (1871) of which the corner-stone was laid by his own hands.

Of the fraternal societies where he holds membership, the Mt. Hennion Lodge of Masons, the Massachusetts Charitable Mechanics' Association, and the Veteran Firemen, "Uncle John," as he is known, makes the Commonwealth Lodge 3 of the I. O. O. F., where he is past grand, his peculiar home as a club man, and it was from this Lodge that thirty-six of his brethren came to greet him last Monday night with their presence, an address and a fragrant gift of 80 Jack roses. The welcome of himself and his hospitable wife was attested by the delicious banquet provided for them, and for his children and grandchildren, and the invited neighbors. A grandchild presented Mr. Maxwell with a bouquet of 80 pinks. Singing the songs of long ago, a recitation of "The Old Kitchen," by Miss Anna L. Waite, and a poem varied the enjoyment of the sociable evening, and tho' every guest went away delighted, the happiest of all was "Uncle John" himself.

The poet, Rev. Theron Brown of the Youths' Companion, claimed a sympathetic mystery of birth-dates with the host, whose joke was that he "didn't know when he was born" having entered the world at the turn of midnight between Dec. 16 and 17, and Mr. Brown having begun his biography at the turn of midnight between Apr. 29 and 30. The closing part of a poem read by Mr. Theron Brown on this interesting occasion, follows:

He lived his even days at length
In midways of industrious calm,
Till, saved to age's cheerful strength,
His evening keeps their lingering charm.
We find the sire, the sage content,
And wonder asks ambition bold
Which better born by Heaven sent
Is growing great—or growing old?
The golden laughter of the boy,
The hand-clasp of his manhood's prime
Are with him yet; the old man's joy
Is youth's unquenched summer-time.
And that fine mood of fourscore years
Salutes us like a kindling tune;
His spirit to our borrowed fears
Invites the sky and breeze of June.
We younger souls who chafe and vex
At flying time can look and long
For age like his, whose life reflects
The music of the welfare song.
Such life no seer to tell its end
Nor wish we need that love can say
Whose light with endless light shall blend
As stars at sunrise fade away.
Yet, gentle neighbor, save the spark
To cheer for us this human scene,
And years beyond your eighty mark
Your lingering twilight glow serene!

No Strike

In a meeting of the coal teamsters, local 328 held Sunday afternoon in Hibernian hall, Nonantum building, it was reported that all but four coal dealers in Newton, Watertown and Waltham had partly conceded to the demands which were last week made by the teamsters, and it was voted to call off the general strike which was threatened.

The teamsters asked for Saturday half holidays six months of the year, quitting work promptly at 12 o'clock, and June 17 as a holiday. Heretofore they have had Saturday half holidays three months of the year.

All but the four dealers referred to partly conceded to these demands by granting half holidays five months and agreeing to the other requests. This proposition was met with warm discussion but it was finally voted to accept it.

The local held its annual meeting at the same time and chose Joseph Burnett pres., Harry Welsh vice pres., Patrick Hughes sec. sec., Peter Kane treas., Michael Scanlon cor. sec., Richard Far-warden and James Spikes conductor.

A reunion of the camp Beckett vacationists was held Saturday evening. About 75 association boys from the eastern part of the state who last summer attended this camp were present, besides many members from this city.

The enjoyable program consisted of a reception, informal games, an exhibition of camp pictures and a turkey supper. The reception took place from 5 to 6, and at the same time a large number of camp pictures taken by the boys themselves were on exhibition in the parlors of the association quarters.

A turkey supper was served at 6:30, over which Walter Moore presided. Short speeches relative to camp and association life were made by Carl L. Elson, Paul White of Harvard University, A. D. Murray of Methuen, K. Fred Pitcher of Brockton, M. H. Ward, Secretary H. W. Bascom and others.

One interesting feature of the supper was the presentation of the athletic cup to the Newton association boys by Albert E. Roberts of Boston. The Newton boys scored 26 points in an athletic meet held at the camp last summer, which was seven points more than the number made by the Holyoke boys who were second. The Newton boys will hold the cup until next season. To hold it permanently a delegation will be required to win the cup three times.

Following the feast H. W. Gibson of Boston, state secretary of boys' work in the associations, showed many interesting stereopticon views of life at camp Becket. This feature was witnessed by parents of many of the Newton boys.

The boys enlivened the evening with frequent songs and camp yells.

Friday afternoon the Rock Ridge hall basketball team defeated the Watertown High School five by the score of 22 to 12.

Correspondence

Editor NEWTON GRAPHIC:—

I understand that the proposition to establish a Manual Training School, along with the High School Annex, has been left by the Committee to the Board of Alderman for such action as they consider proper.

During the last five years it has been a part of my business to visit every mechanical establishment which I could reach, especially all the Training schools. The habit of observation, which has become fixed with me, has led me to make a careful study of construction and equipment in the different shops that I visit. In many of them there have been serious mistakes, evidently from a lack of knowledge of what is right, and wishing that our city may have the best for the money, I would like the privilege of a hearing by those in authority, before it is too late.

The present shortage in skilled workers, and the restrictive rules of the labor unions regarding apprentices, is having a serious effect on the business of the state which must be recognized and remedied before it works further injury.

It is impossible for a young man to become an all round workman in any shop in the country today, from the fact that all shops are specialized, the same man doing the same work as much as possible.

The pre-eminence of New England is largely due to its mechanics of the past; to retain this proud position a radical change must be made at once or the prestige so long and deservedly hers, will be lost. It can be done only by encouraging and educating mechanics to take the place of those now passing. The Training and Technical Schools are ample to remedy the evil if taken in time and properly managed.

The coming of the Automobile has given a great impetus in the right direction, and the man who ten years ago would scorn to admit any knowledge of mechanics, will today have a feeling of pride if able to fix his own machine. As every boy expects to own an Automobile long before he becomes President, his mechanical education has to be provided for.

The chief object in educating the average child is to enable him to get a living and be a good citizen. Many unwise parents object to having their dear ones soil their hands, so elect to have them join the already overcrowded ranks of the professions. This must stop, as it is an unhealthy state of affairs when machine shops with an overplus of orders are unable to get workers to fill them, and hundreds of young lawyers and doctors are vainly waiting for business that will keep them from starving.

The training school is the hope of the state and the nation; see to it that the one in Newton is started right and conducted as it should be.

Ice Carnival

The Brae Burn country club of West Newton opened its season of winter sports Friday night with the first of a series of ice carnivals. About 500 members and guests participated in the affair. The ice on the artificial pond to the west of the clubhouse was as smooth as glass and the skating was thoroughly enjoyed by a large number of the best known residents of this city, as well as many well known Boston people.

The decorations were strikingly handsome. Long strings of Japanese lanterns lined the edges of the pond, and hung high over the heads of the skaters in a festoon. On one bank a huge bon fire was kept burning briskly. The Brookline Casket Band stationed out doors furnished a program of popular airs.

In the locker house at the edge of the pond a log fire blazed in the mammoth fireplace where the many spectators had an opportunity of warming themselves. The new curling course, about 100 by 30 feet in size, was inspected by many of the visitors for the first time. This course has been constructed of planking covered with saw dust as a foundation. Water poured onto this for a depth of six inches had made an excellent surface for curling which is as smooth as glass. By occasional flooding it will be possible to keep the course in excellent condition all winter.

The outdoor program lasted from 8 to 9:30. At the latter hour the guests sought the interior of the clubhouse, where numerous dinner parties took place. The remainder of the evening was spent with a social and musical program.

The club members plan to hold about a half dozen ice carnivals during the winter.

No School Gifts

Every school teacher employed by this city was Friday notified that they must not receive Christmas presents from their pupils and that they must not make them to their pupils.

Supt. of Schools F. E. Spaulding said that the rule was not a new one but that it was made several years ago by the school committee. "The rule has not been closely observed in the last year or two and the teachers were today simply reminded that the rule will now be enforced," said he.

The Nonantum Day Nursery

Not infrequently some phase of social service is developed in a community, so quietly and gradually, that it has accomplished much, before the public has become fully aware of its character and purpose. Such is believed to be the record of the Nonantum Day Nursery.

Established in the heart of the Nonantum District, last August, by three young women whose efforts in behalf of the Girls' Club at Nonantum had revealed to them the great need of such a work there, the Nursery was successfully administered by them, throughout the summer. Having proven, by that surest of tests, experience, that the courage and vision which had been exercised in attempting the task had been justified by the results, these pioneers set about forming an Association to assume the entire management of the affairs of the Day Nursery.

At the first meeting of the Executive Board, recently held, most encouraging reports were given of the progress of the work.

Additional rooms have been secured, so that the Nursery now occupies the entire first floor of a house, located centrally in the district which it is intended to serve; near the trolley lines, and commanding the use of a large yard—an essential requisite for a well-equipped Day Nursery. The rooms are nearly furnished by generous gifts from interested friends in Nonantum, Newton, Newtonville and West Newton. Gifts from children, such as the putting up of hooks in the coat room by two boys, suggest to many a mother a splendid outlet for the benevolent impulses of her children.

Donations of coal, potatoes, apples, toys, etc., have also been received. From members of the Board of Directors came the cheering report of a goodly number of annual subscribers to the fund needed to ensure the support of the Nursery.

But even more satisfactory than these material evidences of the success of this enterprise is the certainty that the Day Nursery is fulfilling its mission by ministering to the children and mothers who have long needed just such neighborly service as this. During the first days of the week, from twenty-four to twenty-seven children attend the Nursery, the number dropping by Friday to fifteen or sixteen, while on Saturday, the average attendance is twelve. Not only is the Nursery visited daily by at least one member of the Board of Visitors, but the Association counts among its officers an Investigator, who, with an assistant, carefully studies the interests both of the children and the Association, co-operating with the matron in an effort to secure the best results possible.

The Executive Board is confident that a visit to the Nursery will convince, even the most skeptical of the need and value of this particular form of neighborly service.

Such visits are the more desired because, through the members of the Board of Directors, memberships in the Association will be solicited.

Such membership involves an annual subscription of from one, to any number of dollars, and it is hoped, a warm interest in the development of the work, as well.

As the Christmas season approaches, and the whole Christian world prepares to celebrate this great festival of Childhood, the Day Nursery affords a singularly fitting opportunity for the expression of the joyous Christmas spirit. No less certainly does it offer, to those to whom the Christmaseide brings but the memory of gifts bestowed and children made glad, the needed comfort of ministering to the happiness of other child-life. In the needs of the Day Nursery will be found ample opportunity for choice, in giving.

There is the daily recurring need of fruit, potatoes, butter, eggs and coal. There is need also of framed pictures, especially of good copies of the various Madonnas. Underclothing and pin-money are constantly required.

And money, either in the form of an annual subscription, or as a special gift will help to establish upon a permanent basis of usefulness the work of the Day Nursery.

Gifts of articles for the use of the Nursery may be sent directly there in care of the matron, Miss M. H. Emerson, 414 Watertown Street. Gifts of money should be sent to Mrs. R. B. Shuman, treasurer, 518 Walnut Street, Newtonville. All gifts will be most

High School Notes

The Newton high school girls opened their basket-ball season by easily defeating the Belmont high girls, 37 to 1, in the high school drill hall at Newtonville Saturday forenoon.

By order of the faculty the high school boys were barred from witnessing the playing. There was an enthusiastic gathering, however, of about 100 spectators comprising young women pupils and parents. The girls played in bloomer costumes.

Miss Johnson, captain of the Newton high team, Miss Caverly and Miss Lowe were the star players and they put up an excellent exhibition of basket shooting. During the game Newton played many substitutes in order to give them practice for future contests.

The Newton girls excelled at all round team work, numerous plays taking the visiting players entirely by surprise. The Newton girls had the ball during a greater part of the game.

Belmont high scored but one point, this being a goal thrown from foul by Miss Cashman. Belmont was poor in defensive work and made several bad fouls which cost them three points owing to the superior shooting for goal of Miss Harrington and Miss Chapin on Tuesday.

A hockey team has recently been organized composed of students of the Newton high school. Prominent members of the team are: Glover, captain; Greenridge, Sprague, Ranlett, Donahue, Ely and Gibson. The team will play the Andover team at Andover on Saturday and the Winchester high at Winchester on Tuesday.

The Newton high school basket ball team has organized with Miss Eleanor Johnson as captain and the following students: Goals, the Misses Johnson, Gwendolin Lowe and Edith Caverly; guards, Virginia Tapley, Carolyn Clarke, Louis Walworth; centers, Helen Chapman, Elsie Harrington, Dorothy Kendall and Dorothy Whittlesey. The team has been practicing daily for some weeks under the direction of Miss Mary Perkins, a former high school player, and is in excellent condition.

The Preparatory league will hold its second annual indoor track and field championship meeting in the old drill hall of the Newton high school Feb. 27, instead of at Mechanics' Hall, as last year, where the first attempt to promote this department of sport proved a big failure. As a result a loss was suffered, and to keep up the sport, it was decided to shift the scene of competition to Newton this winter.

The events will be a 30-yard dash, 30-yard low hurdles, 300-yard, 600-yard and 1000-yard runs, running high jump, standing high jump, putting shot and relay race. It has not been decided as yet whether there will be any open events, as in last year's meet.

About Town

A horse owned by a local stable keeper and attached to a sleigh became frightened in Nonantum Friday evening and ran to Auburndale, where the animal was caught by patrolman Charles H. Tainter at considerable risk. Patrolman Tainter was warmly praised by those who saw the act.

Complaints have come to the highway department that lanterns placed on construction work on Langley road and Braeland avenue, Newton Centre, have been broken. It is thought that mischievous boys are responsible.

Coasting has been prohibited on Otis street, Newtonville, for the rest of the winter owing to two accidents having occurred there. Coasting was also temporarily prohibited on Gardner st., Newton, because of illness in a house on that thoroughfare.

Alderman W. J. Doherty is at work as the representative of the Boston & Maine Railroad, adjusting the wages of all the freight clerks employed by that corporation, with a view to equalization. The appointment entails a large amount of travel and responsibility.

On December 31, a week from next Monday, the midwinter term will begin at Boston's leading Business School, Burdett College at 18 Boylston St. Any young man or woman who holds a Burdett diploma has a passport to business success. Each graduate of this school is presented with a Free Life Membership in its Situation Department. This gift is invaluable, as Burdett College has a far-reaching influence in the business world.

BOARD OF ALDERMEN.

academic school who desired, and who were qualified, to take work, as an extra, in the technical school.

Also, certain things should be used in common by the two schools, especially the Assembly Hall and Gymnasiums. Interchange of pupils or teacher—for recitation purposes—should be freely and harmoniously made between the schools, when such interchange would be advantageous.

IV. It is recommended that a technical high school building be erected of a size to accommodate seven hundred pupils; that the technical departments and laboratories be sufficient for a school of one thousand pupils; that the building be so planned that additions can be made providing class-rooms sufficient to bring the capacity of the complete plant up to one thousand.

It is estimated that with a building accommodating 700 pupils, provision would be made for the increase in high school attendance, in both schools, for not more than six or eight years.

The technical school would probably start with 400 to 450 pupils, of whom at least 250, would be in the commercial department.

The opening of the technical school would probably reduce the numbers in the present school to 700.

This would leave room for an increase of about 300 in each building.

The rate of increase for the last five years, in the present school, has been forty to fifty a year. Present conditions of increase in total school population in the city continuing, a technical school would probably bring the annual high school increase up to 100. Such has been the effect of technical schools in other places. At that rate of increase, the capacity of the schools would be reached in six years.

We now loose about fifty pupils from each grade from the seventh through the second year in High School. If the technical school saved one-fourth only of these—a low estimate—that would mean an additional increase over the present of fifty or sixty pupils per year.

Places that had the experience, estimate that about one-half the enrollment in the technical school consists of pupils who, but for that kind of school, would not be in high school at all.

V. It is recommended finally that the architects for the proposed building be selected without the customary competition through the presentation of plans.

This building presents a problem which must be worked out with the greatest patience and care not alone from the architectural, but more especially from the educational point of view. Reference cannot be made to standard types of buildings of this kind, as can be readily done when a grammar school is to be designed, for there are no such standard buildings.

There are, scattered about over the country, a considerable number of technical high school buildings, but these differ much. Each one represents an effort to meet local conditions, on the one hand, and the requirements of technical education as conceived by the designer, on the other.

Technical education is a live subject, more studied and discussed than any other educational topic today. A technical high school in Newton ought to represent the results of the best experience and the highest wisdom as developed up to the very day of opening the school; it ought also to meet the peculiar local conditions.

The plans for such a building can best be worked out step by step by a single firm of competent architects who shall be in constant consultation with the city and school authorities.

Summary of Recommendations.

1. The erection of a technical high school building, a complete school in itself, distinct from the present high school building, but near it.

2. The purely technical departments of the building to be constructed on a scale to accommodate 1000 pupils; the remainder of the building to be sufficient for 700 pupils, but so designed that additions can be made bringing the total capacity of the complete plant up to 1000.

3. The selection of one architect, or firm of architects, without the usual competition, to work out with the city and school authorities the plans for this building.

VILLAGE NIGHT

The following speeches delivered at the "Village Night" at Newton Centre last week Wednesday were crowded out of our issue of Dec. 14th.

Hon. Arthur B. Chapin: Mr. Toastmaster, ladies and gentlemen: It is certainly a great pleasure for me to be here this evening, and I feel somewhat at home after the introduction of the toastmaster and I feel it is a compliment to you to take in an outsider on Village Night.

When one of our Newton men heard a man in the South called "Colonel" he inquired how he got the title. "Was it in the Civil War?" "Reckon not, sir." "Was it in the Spanish War?" "No, I guess not." "Then it must have been from the Militia." "No." "Then how did he come by the title" and the answer came "Because he drew a sword at a Church Fair and they always called him Colonel since." But I knew that the title of your organization was not that kind of a title, that you are possessed of far better ideas and ideals, you are possessed of the spirit of Massachusetts. The spirit of Massachusetts, what is it? Thousands upon thousands of years the sands upon our eastern coast have glimmered and glistened in the sunshine, but the spirit of Massachusetts was not in the sands. Ages upon ages those trees upon the Berkshires have pointed their fingers toward the stars, but the spirit of Massachusetts was not in the Berkshires. Centuries upon centuries our rivers have flowed to the sea, but the spirit of Massachusetts was not in the rivers. The red men hunted and died in our country but left no traces behind them, for the spirit of Massachusetts was not in the Red Men. The Indian beheld in the distance a sail. It drew nearer and nearer and there stepped on Plymouth Rock a Company of Pilgrims and the spirit of Massachusetts had landed. I need not recall to you the early history of our State, the trials and tribulations of those men, the graves conceal the havoc death wrought, but the spirit of Massachusetts was there and then when they were taxed and believed that taxation without representation was wrong they refused to pay the taxes, it would have been easier to pay then fight. Those farmers at Lexington and Concord might far better have set by their own firesides rather than taking their muskets from the walls and kissing their loved ones goodbye and to have fought the British Regulars but they could not be conquered for the spirit of Massachusetts was there. Then there were those men at Bunker Hill, why did they not retreat when their powder gave out, and when the Civil War broke out the 6th Massachusetts Regiment was the first to respond, and again in the Spanish War the spirit of Massachusetts was again shown.

In almost every village and hamlet throughout our State there is a Soldier's Monument standing as a sentinel above the spirit of Massachusetts that lies beneath. It is for us to decide whether the spirit of Massachusetts shall be carried forward along the lines that it has been brought to us. At the present time we think of things in large numbers, eighty million of people, and we forget that it is simply eighty million times one person. It is the collection of individuals that make up the City and the collection of individuals that make up the State. There are two classes of individuals, those who go with the crowd those who do everything everyone else does because everyone else does it, they simply mean one more shopper in the stores, one more seat in the theatre, one more listener in the Church and one more grave in the Church yard. The other class is the class that believes in doing things, in accomplishing things, because they think and believe and know they are right. The individual who goes on with the idea of accomplishing something and doing something, he is sure to be successful and that is the purpose of your Village Improvement Association. I take it you believe in doing those things that will benefit this community and this City. You believe in striving to keep up a civic spirit that will be of advantage in the Civil life in the Legislative life and in the life of this community. Then if you do this you will have accomplished something. Every member will have done something and then you will have been able to do some little work in this world.

Mr. Alvord: We have with us tonight the president of our Board of Aldermen two members of the General Court who have served terms in the Board of Aldermen, and I would not omit to speak also of our school teachers, and pay this public tribute to their zeal and devotion to look after our children. When the Hon. Nicholas Longworth was invited to a dinner one time he said, "I don't suppose I would be invited here only that I am the son-in-law of my father-in-law." I was not introducing the next speaker as the son of his father, but he is a man who thinks and speaks and acts for himself, Mr. Elias B. Bishop. Mr. Bishop said:

After the somewhat ambiguous introduction I feel not exactly like the dropped egg which the President of the Improvement Association told you about last year but more like a certain Irishman, who lately over, was working in the rail road yards. One day he happened to be in the yard office when the force was out. The telephone bell rang vigorously several times and he at last decided it ought to be answered. He walked over to the instrument, took down the receiver, put his mouth to the transmitter, just as he had seen others do. "Hello," he called. "Hello," answered the voice at the other end of the line, "is this 8-6-5-9?" "Aw, gwan! That'd be Oi am, a box car?"

Now the toast-master doesn't know just what my number is, for when several weeks ago the various local speakers were selected by lot it was understood and agreed that our speeches were to be written for us by Henry Baily. The number which I drew carried with it as a subject "The Inside and Secret History of the Removal of the Homer Street car tracks" and in due time Mr. Baily sent me my speech. Unfortunately for me the toast-master recollects on Tuesday that was a dead issue, cancelled my subject and told me to talk for five minutes and try to prepare the way for the next speaker. He also told me that Mr. Baily was so busy preparing the brilliant repartee which the toast-master and the President of the Improvement Association so lately indulged in that he couldn't write another speech for me. When most of you think of a subscription list. But the Association stands for something more than that. You are all more or less familiar with its history. How it started out fifty years or so ago as a tree planting association and with the work which it did fifteen or twenty years ago. But some of you ask what is it doing now, what good is it at the present time? Why doesn't it do more?

Those of you who are old settlers, and I count myself as one of those, can remember the time fifteen or twenty years ago when every one knew everybody else. The village was small and when anything was done everybody was in it and knew all about it. If a new street sign was wanted at the corner of Beacon street and Lake avenue, Mr. Pope away down on Beacon street towards Chestnut Hill, knew about it just as soon as Mr. Bennett who lived nearby, and as they both belonged to the Association they knew when the Association took the matter up and had the crying need remedied. So when a hall was needed the strength of the Association clubbed together and under a different name bought the old Baptist church, and so we had a hall in which the members of the Association made merry. It was practically the same way a few years later when the Play Ground came into being.

Now all these things happened when we were a small homogenous village and all the credit went, and properly went to the Association of which we were all members. But of recent years the village has grown, and, as is natural social interests have separated. Our Ashton Park neighbors know very little about our friends a mile away on Oxford Road and the people by the Lake see little of the inhabitants of Montvale Road. The result is that we are split up, geographically at least, into small cliques, each claiming that its own section is the Court End of Town, and we have lost the old idea that the village is the thing.

But in spite of all this the Improvement Association has gone on its way, dividing the membership of its Executive Committee as widely as possible among the various sections and in this way has kept an eye on the needs of the whole village. Our old officers have stood by us and wherever you have seen a marked change for the better, wherever you have heard of a movement on foot for some village improvement, there at the bottom of it all you would have found had you inquired the Improvement Association as the prime factor. Perhaps a mistake has been made by the Association in not working in its own name to a greater extent, and in not claiming credit for all it has done but it has rested content satisfied if only it could see the result accomplished.

There are other organizations in the Village, notably the Women's Clubs, which too have taken up and borne their fair share of the burdens and labored side by side with us and I wish in no way to disparage the work which these other organizations have done or to take from them the large amount of credit which is their due. But I do want to call your attention to the work which the Association has done and has had a hand in doing the last five or six years.

Take the new Mason School, many of the prime movers in that were or had been officers of the Association. Dr. Geo. S. Smith, who if I remember aright was Chairman of the Committee appointed at a meeting of the citizens, had been, and was afterwards again Pres. of the Association. And when the question of the removal of the old building and the beautifying of the grounds came up, almost the whole work was done by the Association.

A school library was needed, the Wren Club and the Improvement Association got together and you see the result in the handsomely furnished little library on the second floor of the Mason School with five or six hundred volumes of standard authors. The tinting of the school room walls and their decorations was taken up in the same way and we now have a collection of casts, friezes and pictures, which is second to but one grammar school in the City.

For several years we flooded a part of the play ground to provide a safe place on which small children might play, but owing to lack of financial support we have been obliged to give this up in the past two years.

Take the changes which are now going on around the station. The grade crossings would undoubtedly have been done sometime, but the fact that they are being done now and not five years hence is due almost wholly to the untiring persistence of one who four years or more ago when he was President, I refer to Wm. M. Noble, devoted much time to the preparation of the case and in season and out of season urged upon the City Government and all in authority the necessity for their immediate abolition.

You heard of the project for a walk along the Southerly side of the Lake. In that the Association received a set back, but if we could not get the whole loaf we went to work for the next best thing, and next year as you look across you will see not a long line of gravel, but a bank ornamented with shrubs and trees.

The railroad company proposed to give you at the station alongside the tracks a long uncovered platform, that has been and is being attended to and I think I can assure you that when the improvement

Runaway

Two horses broke away from a hack owned by Thomas F. Melody of Auburndale and driven by A. M. Smith at Washington street and Woodland road Saturday night and ran to Wellesley before being caught. The hack was hit by an electric car, the driver and a small child thrown out and the horses detached from the vehicle.

The child, whose name the police were unable to secure, was taken into the Woodland park hotel and attended by a local doctor. The physician stated that the child was not seriously injured and refused to give out her name. Smith was considerably bruised and badly shaken up. He was taken to his home in Auburndale. The hack was considerably damaged. It is said that the accident was caused by the hack being driven across the Washington-street tracks in front of an approaching electric train near Woodland road.

John Mayo Dead

John Mayo aged 58 years, known throughout the Nonantum district as a hermit, died Monday in the almhouse at Newton Highlands, to which place he was removed about a year ago.

Of late years Mayo had been totally blind as a result of sickness. He was born in England and came to this country when about 12 years old. For several years he worked as newsboy on the Boston & Maine railroad. Thirty years ago he came to this city and was employed in a Nonantum mill. He worked here for a number of years, carefully saving his wages, until illness overtook him.

Blindness finally overtook him and with the money he had saved he bought a shanty on Faxon street, Nonantum and moved into it. Here he lived alone for about eight years. Seldom would he allow anyone to enter the shanty farther than the kitchen. He kept the oaken door barred and the window shades drawn nearly all the time.

One morning about a year ago neighbors found the old man prostrated on the floor of the kitchen of his shanty. At that time he was removed to the almshouse, although he vigorously protested afterward.

Officer Shoots Himself

In a tussle with an unknown Spaniel dog which he was trying to kill in compliance with the new ordinance regarding unmuzzled dogs Patrolman James J. Mullen shot himself in the foot at Chestnut Hill yesterday morning and inflicted a severe wound.

While patrolling his route in the Chestnut Hill district, where the mad dog scare originated a few weeks ago and resulted in subsequent action by the aldermen, patrolman Mullen found a big Spaniel dog, unmuzzled and apparently dangerous, running at large.

Catching the animal he tried to post and telephoned to police headquarters for instructions. Patrolman Mullen was told to shoot the dog, but when he started to do so the animal began to jump and snap at him.

Throwing out his leg to ward off the dog's head and fired. The dog gave a lunge against the patrolman's leg, throwing it in range of the revolver. The .38 caliber bullet was sent into the policeman's foot.

Although he was in great pain patrolman Mullen managed to stand upon one leg until he sent two or three bullets into the body of the dog, killing the animal. He then fell exhausted.

An expressman driving through Hammond street a short time later found the policeman lying in the snow at the roadside. The expressman removed him to the Chestnut Hill postoffice, where he was attended by a local doctor and hurried to the Newton hospital.

Better R. R. Service

The people of this city had an excellent opportunity last week Thursday evening to air the numerous annoying delays and tribulations which almost everyone has experience doing the past few weeks on both the steam and electric roads. The meeting was held in Bray small hall Newton Centre and was under the auspices of the Newton Centre Improvement Association. President Matt B. Jones was in the chair and despite the inclement weather the hall was well filled.

The annoyances caused by the delays and accidents on the steam road was the first subject.

There is a movement among those higher up in the New York Central management to sidetrack Boston," asserted Ex-Senator A. L. Harwood. "Public sentiment is all that is needed to bring about a reform," he continued, "and we do not propose to have freight and passenger trains continually delayed. These conditions did not exist under the former management of the old Boston & Albany road and there is no excuse for them happening now," said he. He asserted that he believed it would do no good now to complain to the Boston authorities of the road and that the only effective method left would be to make a "noise" that would be heard in New York.

George S. Smith related how shipments made over the New York Central road had constantly been delayed of late. "This is not a complaint of only Newton Centre but of all New England," he declared amid applause. He said that a committee appointed to take up the situation before the railroad commission would find itself crowned with glory.

Hon. J. M. W. Hall said that certain provisions requiring a maintenance of good transportation facilities under which the New York Central road was operating in this vicinity had been absolutely ignored by the railroad. "This is one of the most long suffering communities I was ever in," he declared, but hastened to add that he thought Newton Centre one of the prettiest suburbs in the country which he had ever visited.

Samuel Ward wanted more clocks on the South Station in Boston. "The present clock is always fast," he said and he humorously related some of his experiences in running for a train to Newton Centre and after finally getting aboard being shifted to another track and delayed more than half an hour in getting started out of the station yards. He wanted the committee to mention the matter of more clocks to the commissioners.

A committee was appointed to investigate the railroad situation, consisting of William N. Noble, chairman, Hon. J. M. W. Hall, Geo. S. Smith, Wm. M. Flanders, Endicott P. Saltonstall and A. E. Alvord.

The street railway situation also brought out vigorous comment.

Mr. Burton P. Gray said "we are not here to hurl invective at this road. We probably have all of us done more or less of that when we have had to wait a half hour, or have been refused the right to ride on some car we thought we had a right to ride on. We are here to consider just what is best to be done to give us proper service. We recognize that a street railway corporation has its rights. An immense amount of money has been contributed in the purchase of its stock, and used to build and equip the road, and it takes lots of money to maintain a proper railroad. We all believe that those who have invested their money in this service should in justice receive fair compensation on their investment. But we also believe that the road derives its rights from us. We grant the franchise and the law requires that it shall give the public reasonable and proper service. No one of us wishes the Newton Street Railway Co. to give us a ten cent ride for five cents. We are not trying to get something for nothing; but we are willing to pay our money if we can have the service. Three things are to be considered, first—ought the Company to be required to give free transfers over all its system, second—How frequently should cars be run down the "Walnut st" line. Prior to Nov. 1st, there was a 15 minute service by way of Upper Falls and Commonwealth ave. Since that time, two cars have been taken off leaving one half hour service. We should insist however on 15 minute service with two thru cars an hour.

According to figures filed with the railroad commissioners the company has been losing money. I have looked them over and in one place find where the road has charged itself a greater price for power in running its cars than they had charged to other companies, to which it had been selling.

Mr. W. H. Reed said perhaps we are not prepared to answer the question so suddenly as it has been put. A postal card canvas would give a full expression.

We should insist however on 15 minute service with two thru cars an hour.

Rev. E. M. Noyes said that between 15 minute service to Lake st half hour thru service to Boston, he would take neither. He also said the cars should be marked so that strangers would know where to go. Now they are marked "Newton" and not "Newton Centre".

Prof. W. N. Donovan said he would like to have frequent cars. Cars are now always late. Women and children get chilled waiting at Centre and Beacon streets for cars 5 to 25 minutes late. Fifteen minute service would mean regularity. The Company can give us as we would save the delay always experienced at Lake st. Now is the time to force this issue. If we cannot make reasonable arrangements with the Company, the matter should be taken to the Railroad Commission.

Mr. W. E. Webster thought that Mr. Gray's suggestion a very sensible one. It does not make so much difference whether the cars run every 20 minutes or every half hour if we get the service.

A letter was read from Col. E. H. Haskell in which it was said that the time has come for a vigorous movement of this character and that sentiment for a decent and regular service will find such expression as to compel the Newton Street Railway Co. to provide it at once. "We should vigorously and persistently insist on a through car service to Boston." "We have been very patient in this matter and our patience has been abused by the Company, who secured their franchise with an understanding that we were to have through car service to Boston and there is no reason why we should not have this service as well as Newton Corner or Auburndale. If it cannot be secured through the present Company, I hope the Association will authorize its officers to petition the aldermen to grant the Boston & Worcester Co. a right of way to Newton Centre square over the same tracks now being used by the present Company."

Prof. W. Z. Ripley offered this resolution which was subsequently adopted:

Resolved, that a committee consisting of Burton P. Gray, Christopher M. Goddard, E. H. Haskell, Henry Baily, and Samuel W. Wilder be chosen to represent the Newton Centre Improvement Association and the citizens generally of Newton Centre, in the matter of securing improved street railway facilities for this village. That said committee be requested to confer with the representatives of the street railway company and if necessary to appear before the railroad commissioners in the above matter.

Mr. D. N. B. Coffin said that he could not agree with the sentiment that thru service is equivalent for a good 15 minute service, instead of a half hour service. It is quite practicable to avail ourselves of the excellent service Boston gives us to Lake st., the important point should be, to connect. What we want is something by which we can go to Boston and have time enough to get back to Newton Centre the same day. This is impossible under present management. Let us not sacrifice a good service with transfer at Lake st., for a thru service because a 15 minute service is infinitely better than anything we have had in the past.

Mr. Ludwig Gerhard said that the Newton road does not feel inclined to give the Boston Elevated any more of their capital in the use of free electric cars and Pres. Bancroft says that there is no room in the subway. I would like to see those fine brown cars, which run down Beacon street, come into Newton Centre. The Elevated is earning good large dividends and they ought to do something for us, for we have been doing a great deal for them. The committee should be instructed to require the Elevated and Railroad Commissioners to furnish the Newton company with the use of those brown cars on 15 minute schedule.

Mr. C. M. Goddard said when you speak of thru cars to Boston you think of going in. It is all right going in, but there is also the coming out. Would the majority of people prefer a thru car or would they prefer a thru service. It does not do much good to go to the railway authorities and tell them you want better service. They would like to know what you want. We shall gain nothing by ridicule or sarcasm. We should start afresh on a business proposition, and if we find they will not deal on a business proposition we should go to the railroad commissioners.

Mr. H. J. Kellaway said we have had good service in our vicinity for a certain time, but now we must wait a half hour. There is considerable inconvenience to our neighborhood in consequence. Newton Centre is considered one of the finest residential suburbs of Boston and we ought to take care of it. We have been growing worse instead of better.

Prof. Ripley then moved that it was the sense of the meeting that thru car service to Boston was preferable to prompt service to Lake st. The motion was subsequently defeated.

Mr. Samuel Tarplin said the question is what are you to get from this system, what do actually the people need, not what do they want. The Newton & Boston Co. has always tried since they began to cheat the people out of their rights. They got an extension to Commonwealth avenue on condition they gave free transfers. Now they say that it is not constitutional to compel them to keep their agreement.

Mr. W. M. Noble said that when we come right down to getting something done we shall have to take the problem as it is. Learn the company's condition and then ask for the nearest thing to what is right and fair. It is not true that the railway system of Newton is in the hands of robbers or men who are endeavoring to get something which does not belong to them. Such men as Mr. Powers know that the best way to handle the railway situation in Newton is to make the railway give people what they can. Newton men are intelligent and people of common sense. We have got to go before the Company with facts as they exist not with threats and hot air.

According to figures filed with the railroad commissioners the company has been losing money. I have looked them over and in one place find where the road has charged itself a greater price for power in running its cars than they had charged to other companies, to which it had been selling.

Mr. W. H. Reed said perhaps we are not prepared to answer the question so suddenly as it has been put. A postal card canvas would give a full expression.

There is something encouraging in the words and actions of the Newton Centre committee now at work on the matter of street railway transportation. It is about the first time that sensible words have been said in public by the large body of citizens interested in this service. Here tofore the language, in the words of Mr.
Noble has been mostly "threats and hot air" and the committee have certainly started on the right track.

At the same time it is only fair to say that the demand for thru service from Needham to Boston is one which street railway men will certainly condemn. A thru line operating on double track for part of the distance and on a single track for the remainder, presents operating obstacles, which even a layman ought to recognize. When to this is added the inevitable delays caused by the passage of cars thru Boston, the running time on such a combination would be something to make angels weep.

The individual complaints from the patrons of the steam railroad have at last found voice in the recent appointment of a strong committee to take the matter up in the most effective manner.
The railroad officials have now got beyond the point where the delays were a mystery even to them and now say frankly that poor coal and leaky flues cause the principal difficulty. The patience of our people is certainly taxed
when at least 25 per cent of all the trains are more or less late and with the Railroad Commission for immediate appeal
and the Legislature as a final referee
something is liable to happen.

Newton Club.

The children's party will be held tomorrow afternoon at Mr. Osborn, in sight of hand as the attraction.

Bowling prizes Christmas day were won by Mr. F. B. Chaney, three string and Mr. J. E. Mullen for high single.

Mrs. Arthur French of Brookline gave a largely attended dance last evening.

Newton won two out of three from Maugus Wednesday evening in the Newton bowling league. Hutchinson with 523 being high man.

Hunnewell Club

The annual assembly will be held Monday evening.

The children's Christmas party will be given tomorrow afternoon from three to five o'clock. Mr. Walter Eccles the imprisoned will furnish the entertainment.

The club bowling team surprised its friends Wednesday night with a two out of three win at Allston Golf. Barker with 546 was high man.

Y. M. C. A.

The Newton Juniors won from the Hilton club of South Boston in a basket-ball game here Wednesday night.
Smith was the star player for the home team, and M. Landy put up a good

The Newton Intermediates easily defeated the Quincys, 44 to 5 in a basketball game played in the Y. M. C. A. gymnasium Wednesday night. The home team had everything its own way from the start. Noyes put up an interesting exhibition of basket shooting by making 11 baskets from the floor.

College Tea

A dainty afternoon tea was given yesterday afternoon at the residence of Mr.
and Mrs. Henry R. Viets on Hunnewell avenue, Newton, to nearly a hundred

Miss Marion Niles and Miss Louise Jellerson; all members of the senior class
at Smith and the Newton club of that college were the principal guests. The tea table with its dual attractions to sight and taste was in charge of Miss Elsie Horsfall and Miss Leah Bailey.

Street Railway Notes

The neat little waiting station recently erected at Belcher's Corner, Newton Highlands, by the Boston and Worcester St. Ry. Co. will be opened to the public on Tuesday, January 1st, 1907.

This station will be heated during the cold weather by electric heaters. A station at this point has been greatly needed and will be much appreciated by the general public.

THE LODGE.In Many Towns It Has Become the Great Social Center.

The lodge has become the social center of many a town. It is so to a greater degree perhaps in the west than in the east. On the plains distances between population centers are greater, the ties of old family acquaintances are lacking, the fraternal order is the one thing that knows no barrier of wealth or position. The fact that many of the orders admit men and women to their membership on the same terms adds to the strength of the social claim; it also brings about odd situations.

"I am going downtown tonight," remarked a country town banker one evening to his wife. "The lodge meets this evening."

"That will leave me alone," was the response, "for Anna" (their one servant) "is going to lodge too."

"Yes," agreed the husband. "We belong to the same lodge."

This very equality brings about a comradeship that in the newer communities makes easier the ways of life. You have an employee in your office or store. He works with his coat off, and through the day you consider him but little. You do not ask his opinion or defer to his judgment. But on lodge night when you enter the portals—a lodge door, though it may admit only to the second floor of an unpainted
frame building, is always a "portal"—you make your obeisance and mystic signs before a dignified potentate in robes of red and yellow whom you recognize as your employee.—C. M.
Harger in Atlantic.

A DROP OF WATER.It Is a Midget World Teeming With Struggling Life.

In a single drop of unfiltered water
may be seen in miniature the tragedy
that goes on perpetually in the world
at large, for in the little drop there is a whole universe of life, with all its terrible and death dealing competition,
with all its mystery and woe.

It was a French biologist who invented
the method by which this wonderful state of things is demonstrated.

He called the method the "hanging drop slide," and it is beautifully simple. A drop of water from the edge of an ordinary pond is placed in a hollowed out space on a small strip of glass and sealed with a bit of thinner glass. And now day after day and night after night the hideous business goes on in that one drop of perfectly clear and apparently pure water may be watched and studied at the leisure
of the observer.

The drop of water is a world in itself.
Multitudes of animals swim about in it with plenty of room. The giant worms with tremendous swish-ing tails, of whose approach one is made aware by the confusion and panic
of the smaller creatures scurrying
out of the way in fear of their lives,
and countless bacteria inhabit that drop as their permanent and proper
home and their ranging place.

Alcohol in Cold Weather.

A scientist thus explains why it is as dangerous to use alcohol in the polar regions: A moderate use of alcohol causes a deposit of fat. Alcohol is not turned into fuel in the muscle and nerve cells, but serves as a pure fuel
in the organism and replaces the combustion of fat. Alcohol is therefore dangerous in the extreme cold because it assists the throwing off of heat in a great degree. The effect is as if a stove in a room should be heated red-hot and then all the doors and windows thrown open. Heat produced by muscular work in the body is best obtained from carbohydrates in the food; but,
besides this, the indispensable production of heat is best obtained by fats.
This explains the instinctive choice of the food of men. In the tropics they eat little fat and much fruit, while the polar dweller requires immense quantities of fat to keep up the bodily combustion.

The Papal Tiara.

According to Brewer, the tiara of the pope is a composite emblem. The primary meaning is purity and chastity,
the foundation and lining of the crown
being of the finest linen. The gold band denotes supremacy. The first cap of dignity was adopted by Pope Damascus II. in 1048. The cap was surmounted with a high coronet in 1200 by Boniface VIII. The second coronet was added in 1335 by Benedict
XII. to indicate the prerogatives of spiritual and temporal power combined in the papacy. The third coronet is indicative of the Trinity, but is not known who first adopted it. Some say Urban V., others John XXII., John XXIII. or Benedict XII.

Gullemus and the Devils.

Gullemus l'aristensis, the author of one of the most famous works on demonology, figures on what he terms
"a basis of exact computation" to prove that "the regions of the air, the caverns and dark places of the earth" are inhabited by 44,435,530 devils. Where on earth this visionary writer obtained
the material upon which to base such an "exact computation" has been an enigma to all of the later writers on demonology, witchcraft and kindred subjects.

Divided.

Helen, a little girl of four years,
came to her mother with a look of pain
on her face and said, "Mamma, I have two bad headaches."

"Two headaches?" said her mother.

"How can that be?"
"Well, I have one above each eye."

"He needs a pacemaker." I think he needs a pacemaker."

War to the Knife.

The roots of the yucca are extensively used as a substitute for soap in many parts of Mexico and Central America.

The Eye.

Is there anything so wonderful as the eye? I do not care how cold the weather may be the eye never fails. In the wildest of Montana blizzards, when the thermometer registers 30 degrees
below zero, when the feet and fingers freeze, when the throat freezes, when even the torso, swathed in sweaters and chamois skin vestments, freezes; when the nose and ears are frost bitten, when the hair even crackles in the blast—
when all is lost apparently, the eyes suffer no pain, but continue to perform their normal functions. The people of the most inclement, most frigid regions of the extreme north bundle up everything but their eyes. In Canada
you may have a man to rush at you all of a sudden and snap a handful of snow on your ears or nose or mouth, but he never attacks your eyes. The eyes are never frost bitten. They seem to suffer only in a strong wind which carries in its current some irritating substance, as sand in the desert or fine "coriander seed" in the polar regions. And yet, notwithstanding this,
the eyes are the most sensitive of our several organs.—New York Press.

bers of the Post and all veterans of the Gleason of Natick is to be the installing

Freaks of the Avalanche.

One still January night a number of people in a tiny Swiss hamlet of the Canton Valais quietly abandoned their homes, and shortly before midnight
the avalanche broke loose with plunging roars. It started many others in its downward roll, left the usual tracks,
broke through and destroyed an old straggling forest and completely buried
a big chalet in which twenty-two persons had taken refuge. Of these nineteen were killed and seven saved. This avalanche found a final resting place in a lake which its broken masses struck with terrific impact, driving thousands of fish to rise to the surface quite dead. This reminds me that yearly tens of thousands of marmots, foxes, marmots and all kinds of birds, including even the lordly
eagle himself, are destroyed by ava-lanches and their attendant burnaches. Last season at Andermatt a super-bushy mountain eagle was dug out of an avalanche alive, together with the sheep
upon which it had been preying.—Woman's Home Companion.

The Word "Kaffir."

Very curious has been the history of the word "Kaffir." Sir Henry Rawlinson
once said that the loveliest oriental lady he had ever seen was a Kaffir slave at Kabul. When she had loosened her golden hair she could cover herself completely as with a veil. This name of Kaffir is as worldwide as Islamism, for it is the name of "un-believer" applied by true Mohammedans to those that refuse the faith.

The Portuguese found it applied to an air of romance and adventure. Nowhere may one turn without being reminded of the legends that have been woven around the forty-niners and their immediate followers. The names of the streets and of the business blocks, such as Kearney, Sutter, Montgomery, Dupont, Flood, Crocker and Sharon, bring to the mind of the visitor
long forgotten stories of riot or adventure and of fortunes whose vastness once excited his wonder or made him incredulous.
To read the words that are painted upon the street cars of San Francisco is to be carried back in fancy to the time when the city was peopled only by those who, having turned from all else that men hold dear, had gone in search of fortune and found it, always just as they were about to give up
in despair and die of starvation or succumb to the hardships with which human endurance could no longer cope.
—Chicago Record-Herald.

A Puzzling Trick.

Take a piece of writing paper about three inches square and with a lead pencil, the point of which has been dipped in water, draw a circle, a square, a triangle or any other geometric figure. Put the paper carefully
on a pan of water, letting it float and leaving the surface dry. Carefully drop water on the surface of the paper
until the space within the figure is filled. The moistened pencil lines will keep it from flowing outside the figure.

Now place the point of a pin over some point in the figure near the edge. The pin point must penetrate the surface of the water, but must not touch the paper. At once the paper will float around until the pin points directly to the center of the figure. See if you can find out why it does this.

Changing Serpents Into Rods.

The Egyptian cobra is not unlike its Asiatic cousin except in the absence of the curious spectacle-like marks which distinguish the latter. Although it is the most poisonous reptile known to inhabit northern Africa, it is the favorite among the snake charmers. These conjurers know how to render this serpent rigidly unconscious by pressing the nape of its neck with a finger. This act appears to throw the reptile into catalepsy, in which he is as stiff as an iron rod. Traces of something similar having been practiced in older times may be found in the Bible,
where Aaron made a serpent of his rod or staff.

A Venomous Snake.

The only sure way to tell a venomous snake is to kill the reptile, open its mouth with a stick and look for the hollow, curved fangs. When not in use they are compressed against the roof of the mouth, beneath the reptile's eyes. They are hinged, as you can see if you pull them forward with a pencil. The venom is contained in a sack hidden beneath the skin at the base of each fang.—Field and Stream.

A Will on Ice.

The strangest will on record is that of a Connecticut clergyman who broke through the ice of a certain pond.
Finding that he was unable to get out upon the ice and realizing that he had but a short time to live because of the bitter cold, he took his knife and wrote his will on the smooth surface of the ice. It was found, duly sworn to and recorded as his last will and testament.

Offhand.

"Some grocers," remarked the customer, "have an offhand way of weighing sugar, but I notice you're not one of them."

"Offhand way? How do you mean?"
asked the grocer.

"I noticed you kept your hand on the scales just now while you measured out five pounds for me."

Simplicity.

Only small souls assume exclusive airs. The more truly a man the more simple do we find him. Rarely do we come in contact with a person from whom we may not receive something if we meet him on the plane of a kindly human sympathy. It all lies in our lunatic feeling.

A Prod.

"It is a great mistake, Mabel, to trifle with the affections of a man who loves you by encouraging some one else."

"Two headaches?" said her mother.

"How can that be?"

"Well, I have one above each eye."

"He needs a pacemaker." I

Her Claims to Patronage.

When Mrs. Lombard offered to recommend Miss Simpson to her friends as a dressmaker she was honest in her wish to help the little woman, but her efforts bore more evidence of honesty than of tact.

"I wish you would try Dora Simpson," she said earnestly to three of her friends who were calling upon her one day. "She's such a good little body and so unfortunate! Her old customers have dropped off one by one till there's scarcely a person in the neighborhood who employs her now."

"As I often say to my husband," continued Mrs. Lombard, with haste, as she saw signs of inquiry on the faces of her friends, "suppose she doesn't fit very well. That doesn't alter the fact that she has an invalid brother to support and that she tried everything else, from stenography to cooking, and only took up sewing as a last resort and just hates every stitch she takes and always bns. Now, do try her, some of you. She's been with me for the last four days making a jacket for my Jim. Dora is just as patient about it as can be, though we've had it all to pieces three times."

"You would try Dora Simpson?" asked the third friend.

"Yes, I would," said the fourth.

Mrs. Griffin

Mrs. Evelyn Griffin, widow of the late Henry Griffin of Worcester, passed away Saturday at the home of her sister, Mrs. John Stetson on Park street, Newton. Dr. Gott Calkins officiating, and the remains were taken to Worcester for burial.

In the club bowling contest on the alleys Tuesday J. E. Mullin won the single candle pin contest with a score of 124. Mr. F. V. Chaney was the winner of the three string candle pin with a score of 335.

Burton Holland, a well known automobile racer living on Morse street, Watertown, was arraigned in the police court Wednesday morning on a charge of operating an automobile recklessly on a public way. He pleaded guilty and was fined $15.

Patrolman Desmond was the complainant. He testified that Saturday night he saw an automobile occupied by three men coming up Tremont street from Brighton through the blinding snow at a speed he thought must have been near 50 miles an hour. At Waverley avenue he signalled the automobile to stop but it did not do so.

Following the machine up Tremont street, he testified, he found it had run into the curbing at Park street, opposite Channing church. One wheel was broken off. He believed the operator had been unable to turn the corner in time to avoid the curbing.

Holland had with him Fred Marritt and Frank Durbin, two other well known automobile racers who have figured prominently in races in various parts of the country in the last few years. Holland testified the machine was not capable of making 50 miles an hour. He said that at Park street the axle broke and he exhibited a piece of the broken steel.

When a fine had been imposed upon Holland his counsel came into the court room to defend the case. Judge Kennedy said that he did not understand that Holland had employed counsel and would have gladly held the case over until the lawyer arrived had he known that fact.

This was the 46th automobile case that has been brought into court this year.

By defeating Newtowne in an overtime game, 1 to 0, the Brae Burn Country Club hockey team won its first match of the season on the home rink Christmas morning.

The contest consisted of two 15 minute periods and five minutes overtime, as neither team had succeeded in caging the puck at the end of the two regular periods. The contest throughout was hard fought and aroused enthusiastic applause of many spectators, but the overtime period was especially hard played. After repeated trials Leonard scored the winning point.

A Christmas tree provided by the Ladies' aid society of the Working boys home industrial school was dismantled Christmas afternoon in the school hall at Newton Highlands. Each of the pupils received a present. The dismantling of the prettily decorated and heavy laden tree was watched by a large number of local benefactors of the home. The exercises, which were in charge of Rev. James J. Redigan, included selections by the brass band which comprises some 25 of the boys of the home. Previous to the exercises the visitors enjoyed an inspection of the home.

Two Books.

If all the kind words you ever have said
Were printed and bound in a book,
With every laugh and every smile
And ev'ry affectionate look,
And all your unselfish and generous deeds
And all of your duties well done,
And all disappointments you've cheerfully borne—
Yes, every single one—
And then if another book were to be made,
Containing your frowns and your scowls,
Containing your cross words and angry
retorts,

Your fretful and querulous growls,
Each duty neglected or carelessly done,
Each pettish and peevish tear—
Then if these two books were stood up side by side,
Which one would be larger, my dear?

Correspondence

Newton Mass., Dec. 20, 1906.
To the Editor of the Newton GRAPHIC:

I was very sorry to notice in the last issue of the GRAPHIC a comment upon the change of management of the local Street Railway Companies which appeared by inference at least to reflect upon Mr. Clafin, the former President of the Street Railway Companies. Mr. Clafin voluntarily resigned as President of the various Street Railway Companies operating in Newton. It is expected that he is to assume the presidency of the Companies after a brief and much needed rest. For a number of years past, he has devoted himself with great zeal and energy to the management of these Railways and he has had a most difficult and perplexing problem to contend with. I can well understand how difficult it is for the public to appreciate the problem of furnishing service which is satisfactory when the revenue is insufficient for that purpose. Such "irritation" relative to the service as exists in Newton today is largely, if not wholly, due to the fact, and it is hardly fair to insinuate that Mr. Clafin's management is the cause of such irritation may exist. For the past few weeks I have been making a very careful study of the Street Railway problem in Newton and the more I study it, the more fully do I appreciate how difficult was the situation which Mr. Clafin had to contend with. The only source of revenue which a Street Railway has comes from the traveling public. If that revenue is sufficient to be furnished; then good service follows; if it is insufficient, it clearly follows that the service furnished is not likely to be satisfactory. Most of the complaints concerning the service in Newton I assume have arisen with reference to the Newton & Boston line. During many years past every penny received from fares upon these lines has been expended for the service furnished the public, and tens of thousands of dollars have been contributed by the stockholders to keep the lines in operation. If the revenue had been larger, the service would have been more satisfactory, without question. It is the purpose of the present management to cooperate with the public and to do everything possible to improve the service. In our effort to do this, we ask the citizens to be patient and reasonable in their demands, as I have no doubt they will.

Newton Hospital

"Ninety patients treated with diphtheria—79 patients treated for scarlet fever, with not a single death in either of the contagious wards during the present year."

Such was the report made at the last meeting of the Executive Committee, and the report is worthy of more than passing notice for it is a record of practical results.

It speaks of the wisdom of those who founded this institution in our city, for the ability and untiring energy of its administrative head, for the skill of the physicians, for the devotion to duty on the part of the nurses, and for the modern hospital methods and sanitary conditions under which these diseases are treated.

Other work of equal importance is carried on day by day and the opportunity to save life is itself an eloquent appeal to those who have a desire to help the unfortunate. Such results are the reward for the generous gifts which have been made by the churches and by individuals to sustain the work.

Mrs. McBride

Mrs. Catherine McBride, widow of the late David J. McBride, died at her home on Cherry street, West Newton, Saturday, of heart trouble, after a long period of failing health. She was 64 years of age. Two sons and six daughters survive her. Requiem high mass was celebrated by Rev. L. J. O'Toole at St. Bernard's church, Monday morning at 9 o'clock and Rev. Father Costello of Brockton an old friend of the family, was in the chancel. There was a large company of relatives and friends present and numerous floral tributes. The bearers were Messrs. George Saunders, John Connors, Francis C. McCourt, Edward Lyons, Maurice B. Coleman and William O'Brien. The burial was in Calvary cemetery, Waltham.

All of her imported and trimmed millinery has been marked down; here is an opportunity to secure a model at a real bargain price. There is nothing more acceptable as a gift than a pretty hat or bonnet. At the rooms of Mlle. Caroline, 486 Boylston St., in the block of the Brunswick Hotel, Boston.

UNITARIAN CLUB.

The monthly meeting of the Unitarian Club was held Thursday evening of last week at the Unitarian Church, West Newton. The attendance of members and guests was one of the largest in the club history and was probably owing to the interest felt in seeing the interior of the beautiful new church as well as the vital impetus of the subject to be considered, that of Industrial Training in the Schools, which will probably become a fact in Newton within a few years. A short reception was first held in the parlors and the dinner followed at 6:30 in the banquet hall. At the business session several new members were elected and a number of applications for membership were received. Preceding the open meeting at 8 o'clock in the main auditorium, Mr. Henry T. Wade rendered a program of organ selections. President George Hutchinson presided and the subject, "The Public Schools; What They are and What They Should Be," was considered by Dr. Frank E. Spaulding, superintendent of the Newton Schools; Mr. James P. Monroe, a paper manufacturer, and Prof. Paul H. Hanus of Harvard University, in the order named.

PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON.

Guests and Members of the Unitarian Club.—

I am a little confused by the multiplicity of blessings, and it seems to me that this evening we have all one or more causes for especial happiness.

Every member of this parish is thinking how delightful it is that we can extend to the Newton Unitarian Club, and to its guests, the hospitality of this substantial and beautiful edifice, and you will at once recognize my very great privilege, as while I share in extending this greeting I immediately acknowledged it in behalf of the Club, and with expressions of gratitude say to the parish which very pleased we are to be here.

I now suggest to all who are residents of Newton the joys of citizenship in one of the best governed municipalities in the land, with one of the most distinctly creditable features, its public schools.

We have knowledge of the visible, the well equipped buildings and their surroundings, the interesting public exhibitions and occasions, and we know that we have a devoted and self-sacrificing school board, an able superintendent, and efficient and an efficient corps of teachers. But much that is highly creditable is beneath the surface, and departures of importance for the future are worthy of our thoughtful consideration.

For the entire plan for this meeting, with the gratifying results attained, we are indebted to the chairman of our School Board Mr. Robert S. Gorham, who is entitled to, and has, the sincere gratitude of the Club.

This occasion offers to us an opportunity of meeting intimately our Superintendent of Schools.

Dr. Spaulding has by his quiet, efficient service demonstrated that a thorough training and a love of one's carefully chosen work will bring results almost immediately, certainly satisfying and of great promise and possibilities. I take very great pleasure in presenting our fellow-member, Dr. Frank E. Spaulding.

DR. SPAULDING.

What is the purpose of public education? What is public education designed to accomplish? Everyone who seeks to measure the public schools as they are or to determine what they should be must use his answers to these questions as his standard of comparison. Everyone answers these questions in his own way. The answers vary not only with persons but with occasions. That our discussion here tonight may not be unprofitable, let us confine the measurement of our schools to standards that will be generally accepted on this occasion as in some degree legitimate and reasonable.

We all expect the schools to teach skilfully and successfully the various subjects of the curriculum; we expect them to teach, and to teach most effectively, reading and writing, geography and history and grammar, mathematics and the sciences, literature and languages, music and drawing. No, we may differ as to the propriety of teaching certain subjects that are found in our school curriculum; but we certainly agree in this, that whatever subject we are attempting to teach in the schools, that subject ought to be well taught.

Here, then, is a standard of measurement, universally acceptable; a standard which those responsible for the efficiency of the schools ought to apply, and do apply constantly. But it does not serve my purpose at this time to discuss the efficiency of the Newton schools as measured by this standard. I will merely remark that their reputation for generally excellent work, which they have long enjoyed, is fully justified. I will also express the conviction that the possibilities and the opportunities of improvement in the efficiency of instruction in the various subjects are unlimited.

But however large the measure of our schools according to this standard, none of us would be satisfied; none of us ought to be satisfied.

This standard of measurement, necessary and universally valid as it is, is limited. It measures only one of the proximate purposes, not the ultimate purpose of public education. This standard itself is subject to measurement by a higher and broader standard.

That higher and broader standard imposes upon our public schools a duty, really single but presenting a two-fold aspect. From one standpoint, that duty consists in developing in fullest measure the native individual capacity of every child and youth, in helping everyone to realize his highest possibilities of usefulness and power; from another standpoint, that duty consists in furnishing to society, to the state, the on-going generation of boys and girls fitted to take up successfully all the manifold forms of activity which make up, and are to make up, the worthy work and the useful life of the busy world of today and tomorrow.

I believe there could be found few, indeed, in this community, who do not virtually accept and apply this standard, though often unconsciously. When one finds a boy weak and careless at figures, he criticizes the teaching of arithmetic in the schools; but real provocation and force of the criticism is found in the fact that the boy is not fitted for the work which the critic thinks the school should have prepared him to do.

When one criticizes certain subjects that are taught in the schools as "fads and frills," his criticism, however expressed, rests on the idea that the subjects criticized are of no value, or of less value than other subjects, in developing the powers of the pupils or in fitting them for useful citizenship.

Let us, then, apply this broad standard to our school system as a whole. Is that system, as it exists today, making the most possible of the natural talents of our boys and girls; is it furnishing to the community and the state a body of young people adequately trained to take part in the varied work and duties of life? This question we are forced to answer deliberately in the negative. Our school system is failing to measure up to the standard which we are really and justly applying to it. It is failing, not because the specific duties which we have imposed upon it are not well done, not because reading and arithmetic and grammar are not reasonably well taught—but because the system itself is inadequate, however well executed. The subjects prescribed for our teachers to teach, to use as means of developing their pupils, are generally excellent within the limits of their influence, but they serve very imperfectly the fullest development of the pupils' possibilities—in fact they scarcely reach at all the sources of some of the best and most useful human powers; and they fail equally to give to the busy and varied life of the community and the state the whole body of young people as well prepared as their age and natural capacities would permit.

Let us be more specific. A child who goes through our entire school course, from the first grade to the end of the high school is given, in round numbers, 13,000 hours of schoolroom training. At least 12,000 of those hours are devoted to the acquisition of ready-made ideas through the spoken word and to reproducing those ideas, also through the spoken or written word.

With the exception of about 500 hours devoted to drawing, less than 4 per cent of the whole time, the eye gets little training in seeing anything but the words of the printed page, the hand little training in doing anything but making words and figures with the pencil, the active mind, the creative imagination, little training in realizing its ideas in tangible form.

In the grammar schools we do have a course in simple woodwork for boys and a course in plain sewing for girls. These courses are excellent, so far as they go; but the total amount of time given to this work is only 144 hours, scarcely more than one per cent of the whole school period.

In a word, the development of a child who goes through our schools, so far as his development depends on the school, must be very one-sided. Most of his training has involved the use of his more passive powers, memory and imitation; much of his effort has been devoted to the attempt to absorb ideas but imperfectly understood. His ability to do things, to make things, to express his ideas, or the ideas of others, in any other form than that of words has been allowed to lie dormant, undeveloped. As a result of his school training, he can have little well-founded consciousness of personal power, of being a positive factor in the world.

But the weakness and narrowness of our school training is realized more fully when we measure the product by the demands of the world. What can the young people trained in our schools do that the world wants done? For what has their school training fitted them?

We think at one of the class, over 150 strong, that is graduated every June from our high school; a splendid company of boys and girls. Surely, our schools have fitted them for something?

Yes, two-thirds, or more, of them are fitted for college, for normal, or other higher schools, and they are generally well fitted to meet the requirements of these institutions. Indeed, we are justly proud of the high rank which the Newton High School has long taken as a preparatory school for higher institutions of learning. Of the remaining third of our high school graduates, as increasing number every year are well fitted for clerical positions demanding, beside general intelligence and information, skill in stenography and typewriting, and a knowledge of bookkeeping. But well fitted as these high school graduates are for the duties next before them, I believe they would be still better prepared, not only for these next duties but especially for their whole career, had the training which they received in our schools been less one-sided.

But the product of our schools are not limited to the graduates of our high school, nor are these graduates at all representative of the degree of all-around efficiency of our school system when measured by the broad standard of which we are applying.

Our high school graduates are a selected class, a class selected partly by conditions over which the schools have no control, but selected largely by the very character of our schools themselves. Beyond the compulsory school age, our schools select and hold most of those who are looking forward to some career reached only by way of the college or higher school; they select and hold some of those who would seek the better clerical positions; they select and hold some who want, or think they want merely an education, without any definite purpose, and some whose chief motive seems to be to do the proper thing by going through to the end and securing the diploma of graduation.

But just as surely as our schools select and hold the classes of pupils described, just so surely do our schools cut out and reject most others. This process of selection and rejection is, of course, negative on the part of the school. You may say that the pupil elects to remain in the school or to leave it, and that is one side of the truth; but it is equally true that the majority of pupils who elect to leave school before completing the course merely elect to give up the particular kind of training which the school affords, but not give up altogether training for the work of life, as witness abundantly their efforts to secure a foothold among the world's workers.

No, our high school graduates, who are so much in the public eye, do not fairly represent the adequacy of our school system to meet the full range of responsibility imposed upon it. They represent the strength, not the weakness of the schools; they show what the schools are doing and what they can do, not what they are failing to do. They witness the truly magnificent success of the school system—a success which I would be the last to denounce. But we are in duty bound not merely to continue this success but to discover and to remedy if possible the weakness and the failure of our school system.

Compared with the conditions in most other cities of the State, a very large proportion of Newton children go through our whole school course. But even here in Newton, for every boy and girl whose final graduation from the schools is publicly announced by official ceremony on the commencement stage, two others, having passed the age of compulsory attendance, drop out quietly and unnoticed.

One hundred and fifty are graduated each year; three hundred leave without graduation. These drop all along the way, most of them between the sixth grade and the second year of the high school.

What have our schools done for the three hundred? How are they prepared to make their way in the world? What service are they capable of rendering to busy life of the community? They are not prepared to enter higher schools which might eventually fit them for some profession; most of them are not naturally adapted to a professional career; and the professions do not need them. They have no ideas in their heads that are of value; they have no skill in their hands which the world can use. The school has removed them from the class of illiterates, has supplied them with some general information, but has prepared few of them for anything more than such simple unskilled occupations as their age and physical strength qualify them to enter.

The majority of them are doomed to remain all their lives in the ranks of unskilled or low-grade skilled industries.

Such industries are always crowded; while the high-grade skilled industries, and the more responsible positions in the industrial world are always calling for qualified workers. Few of the three hundred non-graduates leaving our schools every year could be prepared with proper training to rise to the better and more responsible positions. To secure such preparation in the industries themselves has been growing more and more difficult, until now it is almost impossible.

Our schools are not serving impartially the needs and all the needs, on the one hand, of all our young people and, on the other hand, the legitimate demands of the working world today.

This statement of the inadequacy of our school system may come with a shock to some who have been accustomed to consider the Newton schools at least as "good as the best."

Such inadequacy as I have described, however, is not at all inconsistent with a very high rank among school systems as they exist in Massachusetts today. This one-sidedness and weakness which I have pointed out in the Newton school system characterizes the schools throughout the Commonwealth. In substantiation of this statement let me quote at some length from the recent report of the Governor Douglas Commission on Industrial and Technical Education, which President Carroll D. Wright was chairman. The quotation not only describes concisely the present conditions, but points out the steps in the development of those conditions.

"The original purpose of public education in Massachusetts was to fit its youth, through the learning afforded by schools, to be intelligent citizens."

Out of this purpose grew the colleges and the Latin schools, and for a similar purpose the universal common school."

The schools had another but wholly subordinate function. Indirectly, they were expected to influence favorably all the callings in life."

But special training for vocations was provided for by another system—the system of apprenticeship which included even the professions."

The two systems did not conflict with each other. The master was bound by the terms of the indenture to keep his apprentices at school. So the two forms of training went on simultaneously for several generations, each effective in its way—general training through the schools, industrial training through apprenticeship. The child and the youth were never out of touch with the school life, so that there never came a time of abrupt transition."

As the apprentice system gradually gave away, "every day lost by the apprentice system was gained by the school, until impeccably under steady pressure the school came to stand alone as the only means of training, and the children came to be almost wholly separated from the ordinary activities of life."

In place of two systems of training, balancing each other and mutually cooperative, there came to be but one, absorbing all the time and thought and interest of the children and youth—the system of education isolated and one-sided."

The present inadequacy of the schools of the State are further shown by these conclusions, among others, which the Commission reached as a result of its investigations.

For the great majority of children who leave school to enter employments at the age of fourteen or fifteen, the first three or four years are practically waste years so far as the actual productive value of the child is concerned, and so far as increasing his industrial or productive efficiency. The employments upon which they enter demand so little intelligence and so little manual skill that they are not educative in any sense.

Children who continue in school until sixteen or eighteen, especially if they complete a high school course, are able to enter upon employments of a higher grade, usually in mercantile pursuits, and they are able by reason of greater maturity and better mental training to learn the technique of their employment in a shorter time; but they are wholly lacking in manual skill and in what we have called industrial intelligence. For the purpose of training for efficiency in productive employments the added years which they spend in school are to a considerable extent lost years.

The State needs a wider diffusion of industrial intelligence as a foundation for the highest technical success, and this can only be acquired in connection with the general system of education into which it should enter as an integral part from the beginning.

The latest philosophy of education reinforces the demands of productive industry by showing that that which fits a child best for his place in the world as a producer tends to his own highest development physically, intellectually and morally.

The investigation has shown that that vocation in which all other vocations have their root, namely, the care of the home, has been overlooked in the modern system of education.

In order that the industrial life of the community may be vigorous and progressive, the housekeepers need to be instructed in the laws of sanitation, in the purchase, preparation and care of food, and in the care of children, that the home may be a home, and not merely a house."

So far does our own school system today fall short of fulfilling its complete function. What modifications does the system need? That is a question which is being earnestly asked about similar school systems throughout the country, particularly in New England, and the North and East. That great three days' Educational Congress held within a month in Boston asked that question.

Nearly every gathering of educators held within the last two years has asked the same question. More significant and hopeful still, the layman is asking that question repeatedly.

There have been, of course, many attempts to answer this question, most of them theoretical, but some of them practical. Among the latter are several of our State Laws.

As long ago as 1894, the Massachusetts State Legislature passed a law requiring manual training to be furnished in high schools in all cities and towns of the State having a population of 20,000 or more.

Thus far Newton has completely ignored the law.

Eighteen of the twenty-six places to which it applies are observing it.

Newton is classed with Chelsea, Everett, New Bedford, North Adams, Pittsfield, Salem, Gloucester, and Chicopee, as places failing to comply with the letter of the law.

Since 1898 manual training has been required by law in the elementary as well as the high schools in all cities and towns of the State with a population of 20,000 or more.

As already stated, we have a little woodwork and sewing in our grammar schools, a very limited amount of hand work, but possibly enough to satisfy the letter of the law.

Of the twenty-six other places affected by this law, twenty are complying with it.

In addition, nearly fifty towns and cities of the State too small to come under the law have voluntarily introduced some form of manual training into their schools.

The State is just now making further and special efforts to answer this question of the needs of the schools.

The admirable work and report of the Commission on Industrial and Technical Education, from which quotations have been made, was an effort in this direction.

That Commission recommends among other things, "that cities and towns so modify the work in the elementary schools as to include for boys and girls instruction and practice in the elements of productive industry including agriculture and the mechanic and domestic arts, and that this instruction be of such a character as to secure from it the highest cultural as well as the highest industrial value."

The Commission also recommends "that all towns and cities provide by new elective industrial courses in high schools instruction in the principles of agriculture and the domestic and mechanic arts."

Representing the State Board of Education, Secretary Martin makes this answer to the question. "The need of the times," he says, "is a line of handwork which shall be continuous throughout the school course; which shall be broad enough to satisfy all the needs of the child, not only those which arise from his own physical and mental constitution, but those which exist because he is a social creature, under obligation to give as well as take in a world where the highest interests of all are conditioned upon the highest degree and the widest range of industrial efficiency."

None of these answers to our problem is complete and final; none of a hundred other answers by recognized authorities that might be cited is complete and final.

No one recognizes more clearly than the authors themselves the tentative character of all these practical measures and recommendations. In a word, the problem which has been shaping itself gradually under the changing conditions of life and industry, is yet to be solved.

The general lines, however, along which the solution must be sought, appear sufficiently evident.

The results of experiments to date and the wisdom of the profoundest thinkers, both in the educational and industrial world, are in substantial accord.

Our children's hands must be trained to express the ideas of their minds in forms other than mere words; our children's minds must be trained to conceive ideas expressible in various forms and materials and to direct their hands in expressing their ideas.

The varied and peculiar potentialities of every individual not only mental and moral, but manual and manu-mental, must be discovered, developed, and tested, to the end that the individual, may become conscious of his power, of his fitness for special usefulness, and that the service of society may be enriched.

Our education must be more practical, more active; it must consist more in doing, less in memorizing, or even in thinking that eventually ends in words. There must be less of book study about the materials, the forces and laws of nature; there must be more work in those materials, more actual testing of those natural forces and laws.

The school must be brought nearer to the full life of the present day. Its areas of contact with the busy world must be expanded. It must draw its materials and processes more largely from the activities and thoughts of the practical life about it, in the end that its pupils may be fitted according to their several individual capacities to become useful factors in the world in which they live.

This is, indeed, a large program which we have before us. The carrying out of this program will involve profound changes in our school system, changes which can be accomplished but slowly, changes which cannot yet be clearly foreseen in all their details.

But the first long and noticeable step which should be taken here in Newton seems to me plain. We have reached the capacity of our present high school accommodations. Our high school enrollment is increasing every year; next year our building will be crowded. Additional accommodations will be needed as soon as they can be provided!

Those accommodations should take the form of both of these schools, however, are for boys only. But Springfield has just dedicated its Technical High School for girls as well as boys.

It is the general experience of well-established schools of this kind that one-half of their enrollment consists of pupils who, but for the technical school, would not be in high school at all. The other half is made up of pupils who find the training of the technical school better adapted to their individual requirements and ambitions than is that of the purely academic school.

There are few boys and few girls, no matter what their career is to be, who cannot profitably spend some time at the high school period, in different forms of manual-training.

The superiority of a well balanced academic-technical course, over a purely academic course in fitting a boy to make his own way in the world immediately on leaving the High School, is given emphatic acknowledgment by the commercial no less than by the industrial world. It is the general experience of well-established technical schools that their graduates are actively sought, even their pupils before graduation; at $8, $10, $12 a week, and even more, while many graduates of classical and English schools are seeking positions at $6 a week or less.

I realize that Newton is a city exceptional in many respects. Within its limits the commercial interests are slight, the manufacturing interests are comparatively not large; it is characteristically residential. Yet there is one product of this residential city which is unsurpassed in value by the similar product of any other city of equal size. That product is our boys and girls. Shall we be content to send out into the world a large part of this human product relatively raw, or shall we greatly enhance its present and future value by suitable training?

MR. HUTCHINSON.

Mr. James P. Monroe, of Lexington, is a business man; he is one of the type which we rejoice to know is becoming more in evidence, one whose success has prompted the cheerful acceptance of opportunities for public service.

He has interested himself in the practical application of advanced theories and is entitled to our sincere respect and gratitude. Mr. Monroe will now address us.

MR. MONROE.

Mr. President, Ladies and Gentlemen: It is I who should be grateful. A little more than a week ago, I had the privilege of addressing a representative body of Newton women; tonight I have the privilege of dining with a representative body of Newton men, and I repudiate the idea that Newton under any circumstances should be classed with Chelsea.

Finding I am to speak between Dr. Spaulding and Professor Hanus, and remembering that I am a manufacturer of paper, I think of that kind of paper which, of course, I do not make, which is prepared by putting two elegant, finished, admirable pieces of paper on the top and bottom and filling in with any old rubbish.

A story is told of a lawyer not much accustomed to ecclesiastical things who went to the funeral of a client. In the midst of a long prayer, full of personal references, another lawyer slipped into the seat beside the first and whispered, "I am fearfully late; how far have they got along?"

"Well," said the first lawyer, "I do not exactly know but from what I hear, I think they are opening for the defense."

Let me open for the defense of the public schools by saying that the common talk which one hears among average men, that the boys and girls of today are not being trained mentally and in the three R's and the cognate subjects, as well as their fathers and mothers were trained, is all nonsense. In those three R's and those ordinary topics of the public schools, the boy and girl today is away ahead of his grandfather and is pretty well in advance of even you and me. The man who asserts the contrary is the same man who frequently asks his wife why the pies that she makes do not taste like those his mother used to make.

The trouble is not with what is done to the boy in the school, the trouble is with what is demanded of the boy after he gets out of school.

It is very analogous to the present condition of freight congestion out west. You know—the shippers perfectly wild because they cannot move their products appeal to the traffic managers, and then the traffic managers solemnly get together and bravely announce that the trouble is not with the shortage of cars, but with the over-abundance of the things to be carried.

Now our schools today are inadequate to carry the educational freight which society and industry demand, and the reason why these schools are inadequate does not lie with the teachers who in most cases are doing the very best they can with the means and the support which they have at hand.

The trouble is certainly not with the boys and girls who could not help it, that they were born in these strenuous times rather than on some farm one hundred years ago.

The trouble is with you and with me, who know, who appreciate the enormous development of social and industrial life, who appreciate, are forced to appreciate the increased demands upon adults, and youth, and boys, and girls from every quarter in the present day: who realize that life today is "going at automobile speed, and yet who do not give the moral and the financial support necessary to enable the schools to prepare boys and girls to meet these new tremendous and overwhelming conditions.

The girl who went into the clothing industry a little while ago, ten or fifteen years back, needed only to know how to sew; today to go into those industries she must be able to run a power machine that makes four thousand stitches to the minute. That is a fair sample of the tremendous change that has come over the social and industrial life within the last twenty-five years.

But you and I are so conservative that we are blind to the real demands upon the schools, that we simply provide support enough and money enough for the schools to keep on with the old-fashioned curriculum of the three R's and cognate subjects, and then grow because the old-fashioned curriculum does not fit boys and girls to meet conditions of the present day. The three R's give an admirable mental training, admirable instruction, but they do not give what modern life demands—an all round, complete thorough education.

Since the story was told in public by a Bishop, I may be permitted to repeat it here. It is of an old negro woman, who wandered into a High Church service, and who was so overwhelmed by the beauty of the music and the ritual, that she very soon began to shout out as she was accustomed to do, "O, bress de Lord! Bress de Lord!" She was of course promptly squelched, but she soon became again so overcome that she shouted louder, "Bress de Lord! Bress de Lord!" One of the warden then stepped up and said, "Madam, you must not make such a noise. Why, what is the matter with you?"

O, bress de Lord! Bress the Lord! I've got religion!

"Madam, this is no place in which to get religion."

Now it may be said of too many a school today that this is no place in which to get an education. And the reason why that can be said of so many schools is not because of any lack on the part of the teachers: it is because modern demands so much that was not demanded of the school of less than a generation ago. Let us see some of the things that modern life demands besides the three R's, and those tools of communication which of course every boy and girl must have.

Modern life demands health, vigor, gumption, alertness, adaptability, readiness to catch on, power to use one's hands, and to handle tools, willingness to work; above all it demands honesty and ability to do something and to do that something well. It needs of course also models, manners and a lot of other things but that is another story. As a manufacturer and as one having some acquaintance with matters of education, I am here simply to speak upon the business side of education. For this question of educating the coming generation, (and by education of course I do not mean simply sending to school) this question of educating the growing boys and girls is after all primarily a purely business question.

With a value of business in this Commonwealth one hundred times what it is, had we billions where we now have millions invested in machinery, the product of those businesses and of those factories and mills would be even then insignificant as compared with the human product which we are every day turning out in those factories that we call schools. If we are manufacturers we see to it that our machinery is kept up to date, in repair, in condition to do the very best work under the most favorable conditions.

If we are business men we take pains to surround ourselves with men who can be trusted, with men of ability, with men who know the business with which they are connected thoroughly and right through from top to bottom. But as citizens we seem to overlook the fact that human machinery which is everything needs to be modernized in order to be made available for modern uses, that this human machinery needs to be kept straight and clean and efficient, that this human machinery needs to be adapted in the very best possible way to be it the power, indeed, the sole motive power of modern civilization.

We Americans pay out vast sums, but it would be good business to pay out everywhere quadruple what we do.

We pay out vast sums for the support of our schools and they seem to be rather indifferent what becomes of the money. Spending vast taxes upon the support of education we seem to think that the conduct of that education will be somehow carried on by the direction of Divine Providence. Making this upon education one of the largest charges upon the public exchequer, we seem to be indifferent as to the kind of product and the value of the product that this enormously expensive machinery turns out. Because of this lack of interest in our schools, because of this indifference to the effectiveness of the schools in preparing boys and girls for the modern life, the waste of human life, the waste of industrial efficiency, the waste in every sort of direction, could it be translated into figures of money, would represent sums that, as the phrase is, would stagger humanity.

The trouble is that most of us treat this matter of taxation for the schools as a sort of charity to be doled out to children rather than as being the most vital, the most important, the most serious outlay and expenditure that any one of us can possibly make. Children do not ask education as a charity, children demand it, and society demands it, as a fundamental need, like food and clothing, and it is our business to see that they have the best food, clothing and shelter.

I hope none of you come from Skowhegan, but they tell of a young candidate that went up there to preach. He arrived on Saturday and was taken all about the town by one of the good deacons in order to see the beauties of that region. All that impressed him, however, was the thinness and barrenness of the fields, the paucity of the crops, and the general brownness and bleakness of everything, so much so that in his long prayer the next day, he besought the Almighty to send down rain, copious rains, upon this His stricken vineyard. After the service the old deacon pulled him one side, and said, "Young man, you mean well by that petition for rain in that prayer of yours, but what Skowhegan needs ain't rain, it's manure."

Our schools need fertilization. They need the fertilizers of modern ideas to fit them for the purposes of modern life. They need this not only because schools are infinitely cheaper than jails, houses of correction, almshouses, and hospitals, to which those boys and girls will go if they are not rightly, properly educated to be fitted into modern life. But they need it in order that the community may have the motive power of well educated boys and girls, in order that we may have the millions and millions of dollars that are now wasted by not training those boys and girls to go properly into and to meet the demands of industrial life.

Now what are some of these modern ideas with which the schools need to be fertilized? And I may say that this kind of fertilizing requires a vast deal of money, but it is money that comes back eventually four-fold into the coffers of the State. What are some modern ideas? There are lots of them as Dr. Spaulding has said that Congress a week or two ago spent three days trying to get at some of them and then only touched the surface. Tonight let us simply emphasize those that have to do with manual and industrial training. They ought, the schools absolutely must give ample opportunity for manual and industrial training and for at least three reasons. First, because nowadays boys and girls can get that kind of training nowhere else. Secondly, because it is the business of the school to make citizens and you cannot make a decent citizen unless you have made a man who is capable of earning a decent living. They need to, thirdly, because the underlying fundamental purpose of the school is to develop men and to develop women, and you cannot develop men and women by educating them only on one side. Boys and girls used to get this manual and industrial training on the farm and in the household, used to get a good deal more of it than they liked, but they cannot get it in any town or city house today. The father and mother, by racking their brains, cannot find anything for them to do, and they cannot even get it on the farms are weeded by Italian women at fifty cents a day, and even the cows are now milked by machinery. But it is absolutely essential to boys and girls that they should have this training of the hand, that they should know how to work and how to work with a purpose; that they should have this correlation between the hand and the head, which is absolutely essential to their development into proper men and women. Therefore, the schools must supply this need, and if they do not supply it, then they send out from their schoolrooms boys and girls who are practically atrophied upon one side of their beings.

In the old days industries were simple; boys and girls were taught the household industries and many of the simpler industries that are now carried on in factories, and if they went into factories in those days there was time enough for the master to teach the apprentice that trade through and through. Girls even in those days, those benighted days, were taught how to keep house instead of waiting, as they do now, until after they get married, then let themselves be occasionally instructed by a lady from Ireland.

But the apprentice system, as Dr. Spaulding has said, is practically dead, or at least, modified, and yet we have got to fix it some way so that boys coming out of schools shall not drift around picking up the first job that comes to hand, a job that probably is not at all fitted to them, a job that gives them opportunity to loaf and learn all kinds of things in those adolescent years when they are most impressionable, a job that they just where it found them, and gives them no opportunity of learning any proper trade or industry. But most of all we need manual and industrial training, as I have already said, in order that we may really educate the boy and really educate the girl for what modern life means, by education. I have said that modern life demands these things, health, vigor, gumption, alertness, adaptability, readiness to catch on power to use the hands and to handle tools, willingness to work; above all honesty and ability to do something and to do that something well. Now manual and industrial training meets all those conditions. Working at the bench promotes health and gumption and activity and ingenuity in all those things; working with the hands gives respect for labor and makes a boy always willing to work with his hands, willing to take up and to carry to its completion anything that may come to those hands. The boy being thrown upon his own responsibility in this manual and industrial work learns to be self-reliant, to be self-respecting, to be a man, and that is what every boy is trying all the time to be—a man. And because we do not give him opportunity he goes out and takes up smoking and drinking and swearing and thinks he makes himself a man that way. Best of all manual and industrial training makes a boy honest. Do you realize that a good part of the school life of a boy is spent in trying to get out of his lessons, to make his teacher think he has learned it when he has not, to get through examination that he knows he cannot pass by some way just a little this side of actual dishonesty? But if that boy makes something with his hands he cannot be dishonest, he cannot say he has made it unless he has the thing to show. If the teacher finds cracks all covered up with putty and bad work all sloshed over with varnish, the work is there and it shows just what the boy has done and can do, and it makes that boy pit himself against himself, pit himself in that good way against other boys and makes him absolutely honest, because his work is there to show whether he has or has not been honest.

As the public come to recognize these things they will not reluctantly consent, they will demand that these things be put into our schools from the kindergarten right up through the college, and they will provide the money to do it, for they will see it is good business. We think we provide that money, but we want to go slow in those things as in all other school reforms. So let us begin as we are beginning with the so-called manual training school, where you have a big class of boys and girls, where results can show and convince the public, and where if you can, get teachers who really understand how to teach that type of youth. But eventually, in my opinion, we shall carry it right from the high school down to the kindergarten. In putting this manual training into secondary schools, let us remember that it is put in for education not for industry; but also let us remember that the boy is not educated by making something unless he makes something that is worth making. So do not let us commit the mistake that used to be made, simply letting the boy work on pieces of wood and iron that have afterwards to be thrown away, because they are of no use. And do not let us emphasize industry, do not let us make the boy think that he is simply doing it to get a living, let us throw this into high school as an integral part of high school, make every boy and girl take it just as much as he takes the French and mathematics, and then by some system of election, let those boys who are especially fitted in that direction, let them specialize along those lines. But never, never let us make the mistake of putting this in such a way that there shall be any distinction between the boy who works with his hands and the boy who thinks he is a little better because he only works with his head. That is the rock that we must look out for that we do not go to shipwreck on. Insist in all this work that it shall be honest and that it shall be useful, work that counts for something in the community. Let the boy make the things that he can see are of use to him, and let the boys work together, build engines and all that sort of thing, so that they can see that if one boy shirks or is awkward he spoils the whole job. There is no better training for citizenship than that would be, for then the boys will see that shirking of one man means the

shipwreck of the whole. Identify this manual training with all the other work of the school; make mathematics and drawing fit on to your manual work, make geography and history, show how they connect themselves with industry and how industry and not kings and queens have made history. Let the boy see that he ought to write, he ought to spell, he ought to read, he ought to write compositions with just the same neatness and accuracy and finish with which he makes his table and his hamper and all the other things that he makes in the manual training department.

Two little colored girls coming away from a Christmas Tree were overheard in conversation. Said the first, "Don't you wish that Jesus had more birthdays?"

"Yes," said the other little girl, "or that God had had more children."

Every child born is a child of God naturally and it is our fault, our stupidity, our heedlessness that we let them, so many of them, be kidnapped by the devil. But if we put in this manual and industrial training it will act in thousands of cases like the old holy water to keep the devil away. And we will preserve, in addition to doing all these other things, we will preserve thousands and tens of thousands of boys and girls to be forever children of God.

MR. HUTCHINSON.

Our closing speaker is our guest from Harvard, a widely known expert in the art of teaching. He has been honored by an appointment to the Massachusetts Commission to consider the needs of Industrial Training, and is now its Chairman. He has made a careful study of the subject at home and abroad. We are certainly favored by his presence and will be greatly interested in his address. Professor Paul H. Hanus, of Cambridge.

PROFESSOR HANUS.

Mr. Chairman, Ladies and Gentlemen: I am reminded at this hour of a man who strayed into a strange church where the sermon had been going on for sometime, and he said to his neighbor after he had taken his seat, "How long has he been preaching?" The man replied, "About thirty years." "O," said the man, "he cannot last much longer." That is exactly my situation, although I have not been preaching quite thirty years.

I have naturally been very much interested in the question which is before you, and in the many problems of general education which have been suggested by the speakers who have preceded me. I am tempted to begin in the large and come to the special question which is before us afterwards, but for all that I should need a considerable portion of the time which is still left me. Before I have been preaching thirty years I cannot do all that, I can not forbear to consider one or two general questions before I come to deal specifically with the question of manual training and industrial training.

The general purpose of education and the general purpose of the school as the institution set apart by society for the consummation of education, is of course, a fundamental question. What is the aim of education, and hence what is the aim of the school? It has often been said that education preparation for complete living. So it is, but what is preparation? And what is complete living? Preparation we have come to see is participation in life, preparation for life is participation in life. And no other preparation is worth considering, and complete living means to be as useful as possible and to be happy. As a man's happiness depends to a considerable extent on his usefulness, his preparation for complete living must comprise preparation for usefulness and preparation for the enjoyment of his leisure. Well now, that means that the school is to be not a place in which children are prepared for a life in the remote future, but is to be a part of the life of today, is to be that part of the child's life which makes all the rest of it more significant and valuable. The school must therefore see to it that it utilizes the resources of life, that it makes these resources available for educational purposes, because it is only in that way that the school can enable the child to participate in life and so prepare him for the life which he is to live by and by—the adult life.

It is a temptation to specify a little more in detail what these resources are, but I shall be very brief in such a specification, because I want to come to the question of industrial education as soon as possible. Various resources of our civilization are in our history, in our literature, in our languages, in our science, in our applied science, our means of communication, transportation, sanitation, and the rest, in our instructive activities, in our industries, in our commerce, in our physical health and vigor, which has been pointed out, these are our resources of our civilization. To command these in part, that is, to see, to have an interest in them, to understand them, to possess some control over them, is to possess an education, is to be prepared to participate in the life of today. No small part, as has been pointed out repeatedly, no small part of the resources of our civilization, are the outgrowths of our instructive interests, our instructive power. A child playing with mud pies, or a man building a Corliss Engine, or a bridge, is acting in response to constructive interest and with constructive power, having developed the sciences and the mechanical processes and the power to produce the materials out of which those things are made. So it is pretty clear that to get hold of the civilization in which we live, to understand it a youth ought to know something about these constructive activities, ought to know what part they play in the civilization of today, ought to have a first-hand not a second hand interest in them, ought to have a first-hand interest in them and some command over them. But all this is what we call general education, that is to say, education without reference to particular vocation. The education which we have been talking about this evening thus far almost wholly, though industrial education has been often mentioned, the education is general education, that is the education which fits a man to take his place in the world, to become a part of it, to carry his responsibilities, to enjoy its refined pleasures, to participate in the life of the world. That is what general education is for.

It has been said, and said justly, that we wish to train our children not only to be wise and good, we want to train them to be wise to some purpose, to be good for something. I remember a pupil who graduated from school, a high school not very long ago who said to the principal of the school after graduation, "Now you have educated me, what can I do?" What am I good for?

And the Principal said, "You see, I am like the pilot of a great ocean steamer, I have carried you past the shoals and by the rocks and through the channels of your youth; I have seen that you have on board appropriate freight and now you are out in the ocean where you must steer yourself."

The boy said, "Yes, so I am, but it seems to me that you have led me out into the fog where I cannot do anything but blow my whistle."

In other words, the general education is not enough. We ought to develop in our children a vocational purpose.

As soon as the boy or girl is old enough to understand that every human being must carry important responsibilities in this life, and that is about the time he is fourteen or fifteen years of age, or about when he leaves grammar school, whether he enter high school or not, the vocational purpose of what he does thereafter should be the important element of his education; otherwise he grows up without sense of responsibility and ultimately may with the sense of helplessness be like, the boy who could do nothing but blow his whistle in the fog. I am afraid that in this respect the teachers have been more or less at fault. I am not inclined to blame the teachers for what they are not responsible any more than my colleagues this evening, but I am quite sure in this respect the teachers have not carried the responsibility which they ought to carry.

I think they have been instrumental in turning boys away from occupations which they ought to enter, and they have not been instrumental as they ought to be in developing the sense of a vocational purpose to which I referred, the idea that I am to have vocation by and by through which "I am to earn my living, if I do not earn it, to deserve it, as the case may be."

I say, I am afraid teachers have not done their duty in this respect as they ought. There has been too much talk in education about culture, and there has been too much implication of a certain disparagement which attaches to the utilitarian, and hence the vocational in education.

Now, by the way, what is culture? Just—well, culture—it is culture. We use that word every day. We are entirely familiar with it, but what is it? Does it mean the capacity to participate in the refined pleasures of life? If so, is that an adequate ideal of education? It ought to be one of the aims of education, but is that an adequate aim in education? If so, it is a selfish aim, if that were all. Now I think if that is our notion of culture we ought to reverse it, so as to make it something like this—culture means capacity to appreciate and to deal effectively with, to deal effectively with the resources and the problems of our civilization. Where those resources and problems lie I have already pointed out, except that I did not lay stress on the fact that they also lie in our government as well as in the resources of which I pointed a little while ago.

That is not enough, that is still only general education. We want to equip our boys and girls so far as we can in accordance with the stage of development they have attained and the time they are able to spend in school. We want to equip them with that kind of culture, that kind of culture which I have just defined, that definition of culture which means the capacity to be useful in a general way, and to be happy. It means so far as their capacity, so far as their developed capacity goes, so far as opportunities permit, to appreciate and to deal with the resources and the problems of the life today as we find it. But that is not enough. It is necessary to have a specific vocational capacity, to be able to do some thing well, and that is where industrial education comes in.

The education of the manual training high school, as Mr. Monroe has well said, is not education for a trade. That is not its purpose, and it cannot issue in such result.

Indeed the history of manual training high school shows that only an insignificant minority of the boys who graduate from manual training high school enter mechanical industries. They, nevertheless, had very valuable training, a training which most of them would not have had if they had not been able to get it in a manual training high school, because it was manual training that attracted them and kept them in school until their greater maturity enabled them to appreciate the other work as well as manual training which the school afforded. So it has come about that in the manual training schools of the West, in Indianapolis, Kansas City, and in other places of the West, manual training high school offers instruction in all studies from manual training to Greek, recognizing that whereas some boys can be educated by means of Greek and not by manual training, there will be boys who can be educated by manual training and not by Greek; that is, there are some boys whose minds will not work except with concrete data at a given stage of their development.

If you say to some boys, "I want you to find the area of this box, which is so long and so high and so wide," the boys will have considerable difficulty and no interest. Why should they be interested? But, if you say, "Here is a piece of lumber, I want you to make a box so long, so wide and so high, using as little lumber as possible," the boy responds to that sort of problem; he works with the data when they involve manipulation of concrete material and he solves the problem connected with it.

My point here is that manual training and manual training high school are after all only instruments for general education, but exceedingly valuable instruments incidentally, besides educating the boy through appeal to his constructive abilities. They do stimulate interest in all instructive activities generally and in understanding them and appreciation.

They therefore tend to induce common interest between the classes that work with their heads and the classes which works with their hands. Those are general results, of great value results that they would have no other way and we need it generally in the school systems in which they are not yet attainable because means are lacking. But now after all that has been said, we still need specific vocational training. A boy who goes through high school and through college still needs, if he goes into a profession a vocational training for a profession. The boy who cannot go to college, but he could take vocational training instead of the time that he was in college, may go to a corresponding professional school, but we have not yet provided vocational training for the boy who cannot go as far as that. We have somehow believed that it was worth, while to spend public money to train doctors and lawyers and pharmacists, and engineers, and dentists, but it was not worth while no desirable to spend public money to train not merely the captains of industry, but the rank and file, the corporals, the sergeants, and privates. We have only just found out that you cannot get industrial success that way, that you must have efficient industrial workers in the industries if you want to turn out superior products, you have got to have the workers who will do the work that the captains of industry plan. And so we are coming to see that we must have a vocational education parallel to our general education after the boys get as far as the end of the grammar school period. We cannot dispense with that essential minimum general education which boys ought to have about the time they are fourteen or fifteen, beyond that it is doubtful what they shall do.

The great majority never get to the high school an insignificant minority get to the college the country over. This city is peculiarly fortunate in having such a large proportion of its boys in the high school, but even here, you have three hundred boys and girls who cannot go to the high school, who must go into some juvenile occupation, a juvenile occupation in which they learn almost nothing, in which education is not continued, so that when they are eighteen and nineteen years of age they are economically worth little more than they were when they were only fourteen or fifteen, and they go to swell the ranks of unskilled, meanwhile we need skilled workers.

My point is that in addition to our manual training, which we need very much, in addition to our manual training, we need various kinds of vocational and the amount of that vocational training needed in Massachusetts is very large. This is what happens to the boy who goes out of the grammar school and who goes to school no more, generally this happens to him in the large this is what happens, he forgets most of what he has learned in the grammar school, he forgets it so completely that by the time he is twenty years old he is very much more ignorant than he was when he left grammar school and that is wrong, it is bad economy, it is bad for the individual; it is bad for society. We ought to take steps to correct it, and we are taking such steps.

Let me tell you how a nation, which I have not heard mentioned tonight, let me tell you how Germany provides appropriate industrial education for the boys after they leave the grammar school.

It may be of some interest to you to know a Harvard professor is sometimes received abroad in a foreign school. I like to tell this to some of my colleagues when they put on, if they ever do, what is called airs, I remember visiting a school in Leipzig, and I had written on my card "Harvard University" for the sake of identification, and the Principal of the school took it and looked at it, and he said, "Harvard University, Harvard University,—where is that institution?" I, of course, began to explain where it was and what it was and took an encyclopedia and turned the leaves over and began to read what I was telling him and said, "O, beg your pardon, I had it confused with Boston University." I said, "Boston University is a very worthy institution, but it is comparatively young and it is an institution for both sexes, while Harvard is only for men." You must excuse me, I confused the two." This gentleman, however, was very kind to me and some months later when I came again to his office, I said, "You remember me, I am sure, but I am so and so." "But I know you very well and you are from Harvard University, and I know where it is." So we had settled that at any rate.

But what I want to tell you is (I have not time to tell you other stories) how Germany provides specific vocational training for the privates and the subalterns of the industrial army.

In Germany every boy who graduates from what corresponds to our grammar school is obliged to attend what is called Continuation Schools, that is, for several years longer he must attend, Sundays or week days; a school for a certain number of hours a week. In the city of Munich, where I happened to be, these continuation schools have been transformed into industrial or Technical Continuation Schools. There are schools for coachmen, hotel and restaurant waiters, painters, paperhangers, bookbinders, potters, and stove sellers, watchmakers, clockmakers, jewelers, goldsmiths, and silversmiths, butchers, bakers, shoemakers, chimney-sweeps, barbers, woodturners, glaziers, gardeners, confectioners, wagonmakers, and blacksmiths, tailors, photographers, interior decorators, foundrymen, pewterers, coppersmiths, tinsmiths, plumbers, steeple workers, marble cutters, wood carvers, saddlers, leather workers, printers, typesetters, lithographers, and so on through the industries which a city like that maintains.

Forty different kinds of Industrial Continuation Schools, and the boys who are learning those trades must attend either those Technical Continuation Schools or one of the old line continuation schools, of which several still exist, for the number of years during which their apprenticeship lasts. Each school is in charge of sub-committee responsible to the general school authorities so that the school must be kept abreast of the trade, so that it may be kept in close touch with it, and so the influence of the school constantly feels the influence of the changing condition of the world outside.

The teachers are teachers from the trades, that is the teachers who teach the trade processes, for there is more instruction in those schools than materials and the processes of the trade, there is instruction for example in what is called studies in life and citizenship.

The pupils are taught the history of their craft, and they are led to see the particular place that that trade has played in the development of the state. They are also taught the mother-tongue, the mother-tongue of the shop, that is business correspondence, and business contracts, but the instruction in the mother-tongue is not limited to that sort of thing, their knowledge of the literature of the mother-tongue is extended and deepened.

They are taught mathematics and the problems are problems that come out of the shop data; and drawing, that belongs to the trade is there taught, and chemistry, and physics in the hotel trades, that is taught in those Continuation Schools, taught in the concrete, closely correlated way in which it ought to be taught.

These schools are not evening schools, because they have discovered by a lot of experience that after boys or young people have worked hard all day they are not fit subjects for instruction in the evening; consequently the schools are mainly not evening schools, and by law all employers are required to give the employees time to attend them, from six to twelve hours a week.

These schools are a tremendous influence in the communities where they are found.

They solve the problem of how to keep under appropriate educational influence during their period of adolescence that great body of youth who are obliged to leave school when only thirteen or fourteen years old.

There is in them complete utilization of educational opportunity by the pupils. There is no economic or educational waste.

Attendance being compulsory, punctuality and regularity of attendance are assured.

The program of studies for each kind of apprentice school is strictly limited in scope to an essential minimum of subject-matter, general and technical, and the nature of this subject-matter is well adapted to the end in view, namely, the extension of the youth's education as an individual and as a citizen, and the foundation of progressive interest and technical skill in his chosen calling.

All the teachers, except the shopwork or technical teachers, being trained teachers (elementary-school teachers), the methods are generally excellent, and the results correspondingly good. This is, of course, another reason why there is so little economic and educational waste. Every hour of instruction counts.

Only youth already in service are members of these schools.

Since representatives of the several trades and businesses are on the governing boards of the several schools, the technical work should be, and probably is, determined by the actual contemporary needs of the several vocations represented by the schools.

The schools embody a well-defined policy that underlies all forms of education in Germany, namely, that every efficient worker, whether in trade, business, or profession, requires general education and, also, technical preparation for the particular work he is to do.

Now I take it that some such scheme as that, some such plan as that must be worked out for us. Our need is the

We must, therefore, find some way of utilizing such a scheme as that in this country. We cannot transfer it directly, the conditions are different. They are so different that it would be impossible to transfer such schools directly to this country. Just how the problem of adoption or invention of appropriate schools is to be solved none can say at this moment, but it is a matter for congratulation that Massachusetts is once more in the van in this matter.

Massachusetts is the first state that has taken steps to see what can be done about developing real industrial education for the workers, and for the next grade, as well as for the higher grade, is only returning to a policy which Massachusetts adopted at the very beginning.

If you read the law of 1647, which is one of the two laws on which the public school system is based today, you will find the Selectmen were "required to see to it that the masters and parents give children such training as is profitable to the Commonwealth in learning and labor." We are, therefore, only returning to the policy outlined by Massachusetts many years ago, when Massachusetts decided that every child should be trained in learning and labor, and thus fitted to take his real place in the Commonwealth, in the State.

And said plan which is bold subject to any unusual expenses tax and tax titles.

Three hundred dollars ($300) will be required to be paid in cash by the purchaser at the time and place of sale.
